The Amazing Facts about

BALDNESS

...AND WHAT YOU CAN DO ABOUT IT

WARNING!

The following facts are brought to the attention of the public because of a widespread belief that nothing can be done about hair loss. This belief has no basis in medical fact. Worse, it has condemned many men and women to needless baldness by their neglect to treat certain accepted causes of hair loss.

There are six principal types of hair loss, or alopecia, as it is known in medical terms:

1. Alopecia from diseases of the scalp
2. Alopecia from other diseases or from an improper functioning of the body
3. Alopecia of the aged (senile baldness)
4. Alopecia areata (loss of hair in patches)
5. Alopecia of the young (premature baldness)
6. Alopecia at birth (congenital baldness)

Senile, premature and congenital alopecia cannot be helped by anything now known to modern science. Alopecia from improper functioning of the body requires the advice and treatment of your family physician.

BUT MANY MEDICAL AUTHORITIES NOW BELIEVE A SPECIFIC SCALP DISEASE IS THE MOST COMMON CAUSE OF HAIR LOSS.

DANGER SYMPTOMS!

This disease is called Seborrhea and can be broadly classified into two clinical forms with the following symptoms:

1. DRY SEBORRHEA: The hair is dry, lifeless, and without gloss. A dry flaky dandruff is usually present with accompanying itching. Hair loss is considerable and increases with the progress of this disease.
2. OILY SEBORRHEA: The hair and scalp are oily and greasy. The hair is slightly sticky to the touch and has a tendency to mat together. Dandruff takes the form of head scales. Scalp is usually itchy. Hair loss is severe with baldness as the end result.

Many doctors agree that to NEGLECT these symptoms of DRY and OILY SEBORRHEA is to INVITE BALDNESS.

Seborrhea is believed to be caused by three germ organisms — staphylococcus aureus, pityrosporum ovale, and acnes bacillus.

These germs attack the sebaceous gland causing an abnormal working of this fat gland. The hair follicle, completely surrounded by the enlarged diseased sebaceous gland, then begins to atrophy. The hair produced becomes smaller and smaller until the hair follicle dies. Baldness is the inevitable result. (See illustration.)

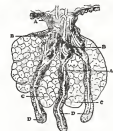

But seborrhea can be controlled, particularly in its early stages. The three germ organisms believed to cause seborrhea, can and should be eliminated before they destroy your normal hair growth.

A POST WAR DEVELOPMENT

Comate Medicinal Formula kills these three germ organisms on contact. Proof of Comate's germ-killing properties has been demonstrated in laboratory tests recently conducted by one of the leading testing laboratories in America. (The complete report is on file and copies are available on request.)

When used as directed, Comate Medicinal Formula controls seborrhea—stimulates the flow of blood to the scalp—helps stop scalp itch and burn—improves the appearance of your hair and scalp—helps STOP HAIR LOSS due to seborrhea. Your hair looks more attractive and alive.

You may safely follow the example of thousands who first were skeptical, then curious, and finally decided to avail themselves of Comate Medicinal Formula.

A Few of the Many Grateful Expressions by Users of Comate Medicinal Formula

"My hair was coming out for years and I tried everything. Nothing stepped up until I tried Comate. Now my hair has stopped coming out. It looks so much thicker. My friends have noticed my hair and they all say it looks so much better."
—Mrs. R.E.J., Stevenson, Ala.

"Your hair formula got rid of my dandruff; my head does not itch any more. I think it is the best of all of the formulas I have used."
—E.E., Hamilton, Ohio.

"Your formula is everything you claim it to be and the first 10 days trial freed me of a very bad case of dry seborrhea."
—J.E.M., Long Beach, Calif.

"I do want to say that just within five days I have obtained a great improvement in my hair. I do want to thank you and the Comate Laboratories for producing such a wonderful and amazing formula."
—M.M., Johnstown, Pa.

"I have found almost instant relief. My itching has stopped with one application."
—J.N., Stockton, Calif.

"My hair looks thicker, not falling out like it used to. Will not be without Comate in the house."
—R.W., Los Angeles, R. I.

"I haven't had any trouble with dandruff since I started using Comate."
—L.W.W., Galveston, Tex.

"This formula is everything if not more than you say it is. I am very happy with what it's doing for my hair."
—T.J., Los Angeles, New Mexico

"It did stop the itch and extend the hair fall. I am thankful for the help it has given me in regard to the terrible itching."
—R.B.L., Philadelphia, Pa.

Today those benefits are available to you just as they were to these sincere men and women when they first read about Comate. If your hair is thinning, over-dry or over-oily—if you are troubled with dandruff with increasing hair loss—you may well be guided by the laboratory tests and the experience of thousands of grateful men and women. Remember, if your hair loss is due to Seborrhea, Comate CAN and MUST help you. If it is due to causes beyond the reach of Comate Medicinal Formula, you have nothing to lose because our GUARANTY POLICY assures the return of your money unless delighted. So why delay when that delay may cause irreparable damage to your hair and scalp. Just mail the coupon below.

TO MEN PAST 40

Who are Troubled with Getting up Nights, Pains in the Back, Hips and Legs, Nervousness- Tiredness, Loss of Physical Vigor

The Cause may be

Glandular Inflammation

Men as they grow older too often become negligent and take for granted unusual aches and pains. They mistakenly think that these indications of Ill Health are the USUAL signs of older age.

This negligence can prove tragic resulting in a condition where expensive and painful surgery is the only chance.

If you, a relative or a friend have the symptoms of Ill Health indicated above the trouble may be due to Glandular INFLAMMATION.

GLANDULAR INFLAMMATION very commonly occurs in men of middle age or past and is accompanied by such physical changes as Frequent Lapses of Memory, Early Graying of the Hair and Excess Increase in weight... signs that the Glands are not functioning properly.

Neglect of such conditions or a false conception of inadequate treatments cause men to grow old before their time... leading to premature senility, loss of vigor in life and possibly incurable conditions.

NON-SURGICAL TREATMENTS

The non-surgical treatments of Glandular Inflammation and other diseases of older men afforded at the Excelsior Institute have been the result of over 20 years scientific research on the part of a group of Doctors who were not satisfied with painful surgical treatment methods.

The War brought many new techniques and many new wonder working drugs. These new discoveries were added to the research development already accomplished. The result has been a new type of treatment that is proving of great benefit to men suffering from Glandular Inflammation or Rectal and Colon trouble.

The Excelsior Institute is an institution devoted exclusively to the treatment of diseases of men of advancing years. If you were to visit here you would find men of all walks of life. Here for one purpose—improving their health, finding new zest in life and adding years of happiness to their lives.

During the past two years men from over 1,000 cities and towns from all parts of the United States have been successfully treated here at the Excelsior Institute. Undoubtedly one or more of these men are from your locality or close by... we will gladly send you their names for reference.

COMPLETE EXAMINATION AT LOW COST

On your arrival here we first make a complete examination. The Doctors who examine you are experienced specialists. You are told frankly what your condition is and the cost of the treatments you need. You then decide whether or not you will take treatments recommended.

Definite Reservations Not Necessary

If your condition is acute and painful you may come here at once without reservation. Complete examination will be made promptly.

Select Your Own Hotel Accommodations

Treatments are so mild that hospitalization is not necessary so the saving in your expense is considerable. You are free to select any type of hotel accommodation you may desire.

RECTAL-COLON Troubles Treated NON-SURGICALLY

Rectal and Colon disorders are often associated with Glandular Inflammation. These disorders if not corrected will gradually grow worse and often require painful and expensive surgery.

We are in a position to take care of these troubles either with or without Glandular Inflammation treatments.

The proper treatment of such disorders can very easily change your entire outlook on life.

DOING SOMETHING TODAY that will enable you to better enjoy the future years of your life could prove to be one of the best investments you ever made.

how the COMMUNISTS INFILTRATED the ARMY

Red spies directed important Army activities from the Pentagon, while their comrades were infiltrating the ranks. Several times, GI's actually received orders straight from Moscow

By DAVID C. COOKE

THE average American wage-earner has little time for politics, trusting that his elected representatives in Washington will look out for him and the good of the country. But it is time for us to wake up to the fact that too many of these politicians have not been doing their jobs—that they have been so blind they almost let Russia take over our Government—

FBI had Harry Dexter White catalogued as Commie spy. He had heart attack, died, under questioning.

Truman became storm center after Brownell accused him of "laxity and blindness" in appointing White.

and our Army—without firing a single bullet in warfare!

This is fact, not sensationalism. The story of Red spies in Washington is scary enough to make any real American's hair stand on end. Their evil talons were wrapped so tightly around our throat that we should thank God they were stopped in time!

The British White Paper of 1919 contained the dire warning that "Unless we destroy the Bolsheviks now, they will eventually destroy the entire free world."

On December 6, 1940, President Risto Rytö of Finland said, "We hope that friendship with the Soviet Union will not cause Britain and the United States irreparable injury. For that friendship is a leper's handclasp and even the slightest wound may cause mortal infection."

And even Josef Stalin said that America would be won over to the Cause from within, that we would be defeated without war.

But even with these prophecies of disaster, the United States either did not realize the danger or did not care. Red propaganda speakers were allowed to spout their treason on street corners, the Communists were allowed to penetrate our educational systems, they were given important jobs in war plants, and they were given an open invitation to spread their evil influence to our highest Government offices—including the Pentagon.

Special propaganda bulletins were issued weekly from Washington; many GIs recognized them as Communist.

HOW THE COMMUNISTS INFILTRATED THE ARMY

Senator William E. Jenner issued famous Jenner Report, exposing spies in high government offices.

Former Commie Elizabeth Bentley gave committee startling information about spies in the Pentagon.

ON December 30, 1944, the War Department issued a directive stating that the Army had no objection to having Reds in service unless there was a "specific finding that the individual involved" advocated the overthrow of our Government by force.

This was practically an open invitation for the Communists. They could join our military services and bore from within, weakening our effectiveness by causing confusion and at the same time learn our vital secrets—and without the least bit of personal worry. They could preach Communism, then could condemn our form of government, they could do practically anything they wished, just so long as they did not openly state that they believed the United States should be overthrown "by force!"

A large number of Reds eagerly accepted this invitation. But they did not become ordinary GI's or line officers. They were scientists on important projects, or commissioned officers with Intelligence, CIC, Office of Psychological Warfare, OSS, or any other behind-the-lines department where they could learn our innermost secrets and stay away from the fighting.

During this period the Reds had access to our most classified photographic archives. They knew how our battles with Germany and Japan were progressing by the minute, they knew how many airplanes we were building and where they were being sent, they knew where our troops were being sent and when the convoys were sailing, and they even helped plan some of our battles!

Carl Aldo Marzani's association with the Reds has never been proved. However, he refused to answer questions as to whether he was or had ever been a Communist or a spy. During the war he was a liaison officer with the Deputy Chief of Staff of the Army and the Office of Under Secretary of War. He also helped select bombing targets for the Doolittle air raid on Tokyo!

Some of the other men who refused to say whether or not they were Communists were the following:

Morris U. Cohen, who worked as a physicist for the Technical Research Laboratories; Herman Landau, who worked on ordnance research for the Army at the secret Aberdeen Proving Grounds; Sidney J. Socolar, Ralph Spitzer, Joseph Steigman, and Henry H. Collins, Jr.—all of whom were either scientist or commissioned officers.

Professor Philip Morrison admitted that he had access to virtually all secrets of the atomic project. He was also a member of a mission to Japan to inspect cities damaged by A-bombs. He has admitted to membership in the Communist Party, and on July 30, 1953, Senator William E. Jenner announced that Professor Morrison was then a leader of the Communist-controlled American Peace Crusade!

David Hawkins was another scientist who admitted former membership in the Communist Party. In May, 1943, he was assigned to the Los Alamos atomic project, and later appointed historian of the project, with access to all the information necessary to write its history!

THE Reds also took advantage of their official positions to send out Communist propaganda at the taxpayer's expense. This propaganda, according to former GI's, came from Washington in special envelopes every week and was supposed to be read to troops by their officers.

"Finally I couldn't stand it any longer," said one GI. "One week while the trash was being read I yelled out, 'Hell, major, that's nothing but dirty Communist propaganda.' He stopped for a moment, then answered, 'Soldier, you're right.' He threw the mimeographed sheets away, and that was the end of the 'brain-washing' in our outfit. He threw them away unread every week after that. I don't know what other outfits did with their envelopes, but I sure as hell hope they threw them away too!"

Soldiers patrolling the border zone in Germany received many conflicting instructions on how to treat the Reds.

There were many other instances of Communist activity in the Army. A former corporal recently back from Germany said, "Sometimes it was hard to tell just what we were over there for. Our officers told us we were to patrol the border of the American Zone to watch for the Reds, and then every once in a while some joker would come along and give us a spiel about why we should be friendly with the Russians. You figure it out; I sure as hell can't."

Russian spies stole our A-bomb secrets, our radar secrets, and hundreds of other top military secrets. They held such an iron-fisted grasp on our Government that every one of our most classified documents passed through their hands.

THE Congressional Jenner report of fellow-traveler activities states that, in addition to the above, secret Communists had wormed their way into the following high Governmental offices:

- Executive Assistant to the President;
- Assistant Secretary of the Treasury;
- Treasury Attache in China;
- Secretary of the International Monetary Fund;
- Head of the Latin-American Division of the Office of Strategic Services;

- National Labor Relations Board;
- Chief Counsel of the Senate Subcommittee on Civil Liberties;

- Chief of the Statistical Analysis Branch of the War Production Board;

- Treasury Department Representative and Adviser in Financial Control of the North African Economic Board;

- Special Assistant to the Attorney-General of the United States.

To show just how far the Reds had taken over our country's innermost secrets, listen to this:

When the OSS raided the offices of Amerasia, an obscure Communist magazine, they found almost 2000 documents from every department of the Government, with the sole exception of the FBI.

These secrets stolen by Red spies were so highly confidential that even now the Government will not release them to loyal Americans, because of their "dangerous" nature. However, here are a few of the documents which fell into Moscow's hands:

A top secret report showing the location of American submarines; working details of the hush-hush "V.T. Fuse" which was responsible for knocking the Japanese Air Force out of the air; information concerning the most important submarine weapons developed by the U.S. and Canada; our most secret code; and plans and photographs of our fastest, most modern warplanes.

THE STRANGE Sex Life OF BOXERS

The big bruisers of the boxing ring often come out second best in the romantic field. They find out too late that many a woman can make a chump out of a champ

By CLEM BODDINGTON

WHEN battered Randy Turpin of England sat in his dressing room in New York's Madison Square Garden and tapped his forehead and said, physically he had felt all right but that domestic troubles had caused him to put up a disappointing fight with Carl "Bobo" Olson for the middleweight title, several of the American boxing writers were puzzled and didn't "dig" his explanation.

The English fight correspondents understood.

What many of the American boxing critics had not taken into consideration was the pertinent fact that Turpin had been divorced by his wife, a girl of Irish descent, who had been awarded custody of their baby and that the same Randy Turpin had been named as the defendant in another suit for alienation of affection.

Domestic troubles had, indeed, upset Turpin to such an extent that he went through his training sessions in private, and when he suspected his privacy was invaded he informed a British sports writer that he might call the whole thing off. In the ring, Randy

"Keep punching when the going is tough," says Kid McCoy to ninth bride after release from prison.

Jack Johnson's brilliant reputation as a heavy-weight champ was tarnished by his marriage woes.

Kid McCoy married 10 times and finally committed suicide in 1940.

Looking lifeless as a zombie, Randy Turpin is shown helpless on ropes during Olson fray. At time, his wife was suing for divorce.

allowed the aggressive Olson to maneuver him to the ropes. Seemingly dazed even before he had been hit, Turpin stood like a wooden Indian, while Olson punched-ed himself arm weary.

There is no doubt that domestic troubles had sapped Turpin's ambition to plan a careful training program for this highly important bout.

ANOTHER and greater pugilist, Jack Johnson, also had domestic troubles and court actions, but he took all his woes in his stride.

Johnson is still rated as the greatest defensive heavyweight who ever drew on a glove. He could pick off punches before they were well under way. For a big fellow, he was cleverer than Jim Corbett, but all his cleverness within the ropes seemed to leave him in matters of outside romances.

His first marriage, to Mary Austin, lasted three years. According to Jack "an invisible something gnawed at us which finally resulted in our permanent separation."

Then Johnson became infatuated with a pretty chick, Clara Kerr, in Philadelphia. They set up home in California and happiness seemed Jack's destiny. However, Johnson made the mistake of inviting one Willie Bryant, whom Jack had known in New England, to share his home. Bryant was a horse trainer for Cornelius Vanderbilt. Shortly afterwards, according to Jack, Willie and Clara vamoosed with all of Johnson's clothes and other personal property of value, while Jack was attending to his ring affairs.

After fruitless searching, Jack became despondent and began to drink heavily. Friends loaned him money to straighten out, and Johnson continued his search for Clara in New York City. Finally, he gave up.

What Gives With HOWARD HUGHES?

FOR more than twenty years, Howard Hughes and his millions have been linked with Hollywood's sexiest beauties. Ever since Hell's Angels vaulted Jean Harlow into filmdom's panoply of sirens, Hughes has worn the mantle of queen-maker.

Actually, Hughes' discoveries have been few (Jane Russell is his only other star), but through adroit press agency, the tall, crotchety, and slightly deaf magnate has managed to nurture his reputation as a "genius" of box office sex appeal.

Recently, however, that reputation received a jolt, when minority stockholders of RKO filed suit in New York State Supreme Court to prevent Hughes from driving the firm bankrupt. Say the stockholders: Too many actresses were being hired without being used in any of RKO's films.

This charge against Hughes is nothing new. As long as the Texas millionaire has been in Hollywood, he has studiously followed a set publicity pattern.

FIRST, the Hughes press agents will announce that the "genius" has found another diamond in the rough. Newspapers are flooded with photographs of a young, bosomy lass.

Second, Hughes himself is seen around town (sometimes around the country) with his new "discovery."

Third, another "find" is announced, and the first is forgotten.

Rarely do any of Hughes' girls get into his movies.

Now 48, Hughes has never married, although he has been romantically linked to a continuous turn over of full-chested curvaceous "discoveries."

Although Hughes has successfully kept a wall of mystery around his personal life, his business activities have been subjected to close scrutiny and sharp criticism. The man aroused the ire of Congress several years back when the "flying boxcar" he built for the government at $20 million could get no more than 14 feet off the ground.

TOP executives for Hughes' airline (TWA) made headlines by resigning on their boss en masse.

Cranky and eccentric, Hughes has been accused of conducting his businesses by whim. It is not unusual for him to appear at a directors meeting or at a swank nightclub dressed in sports jackets and tennis shoes. Others say that he has a Hearst complex.

When discussing his strange "star" system, Hughes' press agents insist the "master" has his reasons. RKO's stockholders agree. Only they go further by alleging that "Talent was employed . . . solely for the purposes of furthering his (Hughes') personal interests."

One of Hughes' amusements is around-the-world airplane trips.

Renee Jeanmaire, an RKO girl, has made one film, but not for Hughes.

A black and white portrait of actress Gina Lollobrigida. She is shown from the chest up, looking slightly to the left of the camera with a soft smile. She has dark, curly hair styled in a 1940s fashion. She is wearing a light-colored dress with a large, dark floral or fruit-like pattern on the right side of her chest. A dark necklace is visible around her neck. The background is out of focus.

Were three of the world's most beautiful women hired solely for purposes of "his personal interest" as RKO's stockholders have claimed?

Gina Lollobrigida, under contract to RKO, falls into Hughes' pattern of full-chested, curvaceous gals. She's made no movies, yet.

The Facts about PARALYSIS and MARRIAGE

By DR. C. V. MacDONALD

Mrs. E. Warneke was undergoing daily treatments for post polio effects when she had triplet girls.

Many polio victims lead normal lives and are more useful citizens than their non-afflicted neighbors

THE United States Public Health Service bulletins on the incidence of infantile paralysis over the past decade show that an average of 5,000 people are stricken with this crippling disease every year. It is expected the total of cases in 1953 will be well over the 5,000 mark.

Of these 5,000 afflicted persons, about 50% will be completely cured, 25% will suffer only slight or partial after-effects, 8% will die, and only 17% will be seriously crippled for life in one form or another.

Fred B. Snite, Jr. now uses a small chest respirator about 7 hours daily. Above, he is still confined to iron lung for rest of time. (Above) Snite, his wife and three daughters, Mary, Katherine, Theresa.

Can this 17%—confined as they are to iron lungs, wheel chairs and hospital beds—ever hope to have a normal love life?

German neurologist, Dr. Hugo Varstein, in his book "Sex and the Infirm," partly answered the question when he said:

"Infantile paralysis—or polio—virus attacks only motor nerves, thus causing muscular atrophy. It does not directly destroy those nerves related to the reproductive organs of an individual. Therefore, in practically every case of post-polio infection, it is possible for the paralytic to have a normal married life."

Looking deeper into Dr. Varstein's book and the research he has done on the subject, we find a more complete explanation of his answer.

There are three types of polio virus: Bulbar, which attacks the nerve centers in the bulb of the brain regulating breathing, swallowing and blood circulation; Spinal, which affects the nerves that control bodily movement below the neck; And spino-bulbar, a combination of both and the most serious type. None of the three types attacks any of the body's vital organs. Nor do they find their way into the reproductive organs.

ALTHOUGH some patients have been known to lose their sexuality after a siege of polio, doctors agree that the loss is due more to complex psychological factors than to any physical deterioration of the reproductive organs. Dr. Varstein's experimental studies have proved that polio has little, if any effect on normal sex drives. Whenever a patient of his complained of inadequacies, Dr. Varstein found that latent fears and anxieties were always the cause.

"My patients," he has said, "have always preserved their sexual potential. When they did not—or felt they did not—I looked not to their bodies, but to their minds for the cause."

He tells of a patient of his—a Carl Hellmann—who was paralyzed from the hips down. After his discharge from Dr. Varstein's clinic in Hamburg, Carl told his doctors that he was not able to have normal relations with his wife. He insisted he was impotent. Dr. Varstein and his assistants examined Carl and

NO doubt she stopped out of kindness. She must have been told not to pick up a hitchhiker while driving alone like that, but it was a hot Nevada morning, and the miles stretched shadeless up ahead. I was thumbing southbound out of Fallon, trying to cover my trail from Reno by avoiding public transportation. I looked pretty respectable in the sports jacket a dame had bought me. Maybe my looks helped this girl decide. They often have.

Still, she hesitated. The car rolled way past me before stopping. I trotted up to it, not too fast because I wanted to seem tired. I said, "Going to Las Vegas?"

"Not all the way," she answered, smiling regretfully. "I turn off into Death Valley."

I should have told her to drive on, and waited for a through ride. But the girl was a knock-out: one of these rounded brunettes with big brown eyes, a nicely tanned skin, and even teeth brightening her smile.

So I said, "That's all right," and got in. It was like visiting the Mint. The car would have cost a working-stiff a year's steady pay. She wore a brown summer-weight suit that looked as neat and simple as a dollar sign, and on her ungloved left hand was a great big emerald-cut solitaire that glistened in the morning sun.

As soon as I saw it, I wanted it. There wasn't any reason why I couldn't get it. I always have good luck with dames. They're my line. Right at that time, like I said, I was wearing clothes bought for me by one woman. And I was carrying money provided—involuntarily—by another, the Reno one.

So I turned on my charm and said, "Want me to help with the driving?"

"No thanks," she said. "I said I'd do it, and I will."

"Sounds like a dare," I said, drawing her out. "Is that what puts you on this road all by yourself?"

"No. My friends are flying, and their plane isn't big enough for three. Besides, a car will be handy for them—sight-seeing, and stuff."

"But it sounds like you spend almost all of your time driving!"

"Might as well. My fiancé is away." That meant she was lonely, and that meant my job was practically done. I cinched it with, "Did your fiancé give you that beautiful diamond?"

Nudists register at camps as they would when checking into hotel. There is nothing hidden here—not even guests' innermost secrets.

By A. SMITH-HENDERSON, Ph.D., D.Sc.

OVER the past 20 years, my work as a sociologist has taken me to hundreds of nudist camps, both in this country and abroad. Everywhere, I found the setup to be the same—camps attended by the same kind of people, all seeking to fill some emptiness in their lives through outdoor activity and companionship.

Nudism or naturism is a fantastic throwback to the pagan life of the pre-Christian era. Not only have many church leaders condemned it as immoral, but doctors and scientists warn that exposing the skin to too much sunlight can cause skin cancer!

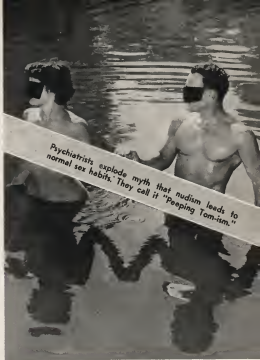

As a sociologist, however, I can add that the most shocking fact about nudist camps is that most of them are nothing more than rackets, designed to prey upon the emotional insecurity of the people they attract!

I have already read many bona-fide letters from disillusioned naturists, each proclaiming that they have been duped into a relentless blackmail trap. I have talked to others who found out too late that the "sunshine-and-vitamins" ruse had seduced them into posing for pictures which were later "sold back" for an exorbitant price!

Often, the negative was kept and the blackmail continued, until the victim was bled to the limit.

Sign belonged to camp recently raided by Indiana police. Charges of indecent exposure were filed.

For the first time anywhere! The shocking account of crafty manipulators and how they make millions from a sex mania!

I have interviewed many owners and managers of nudists camps and discovered them to be cynical operators who are fully aware that their propaganda about the benefits of sunshine and nudism are untrue!

Like other cults, nudism has become a source of rich profits for a few, and a cause of physical and psychological sickness for many.

THE Reverend Dr. William Olcott, Episcopal minister, told me recently that he was deeply concerned about the bad moral influence of nudism on children. He believes that respect for the sacredness of the human body is not taught to the offsprings of nudists. "How strange," he said, "that many of these people (nudists) profess devotion to God and His ideals and yet they proceed to live like pagans and heretics."

Naturists have tried to answer the sharp attacks leveled against them by religious leaders. One of their pamphlets proclaimed: "We believe . . . that immorality is fostered by imagination rather than by a full knowledge of human anatomy. Nudism removes the necessity for the degrading competition between men. Brothers under the skin, they become actual brothers clothed only in their skin."

When I showed this to Lutheran Pastor Herman Geyer he exclaimed, "Shocking!" Like Dr. Olcott, he objected to the physical emphasis these misguided people placed upon religion. "Unless human progress is measured by values of the mind and the spirit," Pastor Geyer told me, "unless understanding of God's Will is sought through belief in Him and through the instruments of science that He gave us, then we as mortal men are doomed." The pastor summed up the nudists with one acid comment: "In Germany, nudism became part of the Nazi pattern!"

Juvenile delinquency has been frequently attributed to nudism. In a small midwest village, a 14-year-old boy was picked up for minor sex offenses and was turned over by the court to a minister who also dealt in matters of family guidance. The minister was shocked to learn that the boy's parents were secret members of a nearby nudist colony which they attended every Sunday (instead of going to church).

The church leader quickly saw to it that the boy's guardianship was taken away from the nudist parents until he was 19 years of age. The teenager was placed in a foster home of normal, loving people, and in no time, his difficulties with the law disappeared.

According to many psychiatrists, group nudism is nothing more than a form of voyeurism-exhibitionism—the "Peeping Tom" compulsion pattern.

NUDIST CAMPS ARE RACKETS

Sunbathers pretend to be blasé. Yet their activity is purported to contribute to juvenile delinquency.

"Unquestionably," says the well-known psychologist, Dr. Hugo L. Kessler, "the dynamic powers which are set in motion in the nudist movements can be traced to exhibitionistic instincts."

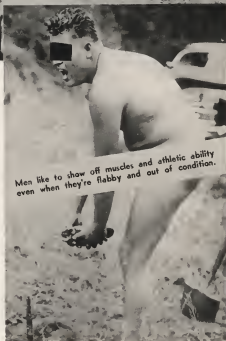

In the female, this is the desire to display her breasts and pelvic regions. In the male, it is the wish to show off his muscles and general physical competence. It is doubtful that either sex is desirous of exhibiting the genitals solely. Says Dr. Kessler: "The psychic motivation is directed toward erasing a feeling of self-doubt by achieving expressions of admiration."

Despite the protests of naturists, the Post Office Department has dealt severely with nudist publications. Uncle Sam, knowing nudists for what they are, refuses to be taken in by their high-sounding, illogical, and untrue self-justifications. The Post Office classifies pictures of nudists as illicit and obscene—not to be allowed through the mails.

If it were true that nakedness of itself has merit, then we would all run bare and there would be no such cult as naturism.

Throughout the world, nudism is frowned upon.

The Mohammedan woman covers her face, the Eskimo female replaces her ornamental lip plug, the Sumatran hides her knees, and the Chinese woman

HOW HANGOVERS AFFECT VIRILITY

By L. MacKAY PHELPS

FOR thousands of years, the Demon Rum has been lambasted as a major curse of the human race—a cause of practically every mental and physical ill from delirium tremens, enlargement of the heart, high blood pressure and cirrhosis of the liver to stunted growth, insanity, serility, and impotence.

In particular, the hangover—classic aftermath of over-indulgence—has received its share of vituperation. In the ancient Hindu Ayurveda, for example, it is described with an accuracy every heavy imbiber will instantly appreciate: "... vomiting, inability to eat, lassitude, heartburn, severe thirst, tremors, palpitations, weakness, sleeplessness, dizziness . . ."

The sixty to seventy million Americans who occasionally "tie one on" will recognize these symptoms with a shudder. So will the piteous three million or so who have become confirmed alcoholics. "Never again!" both of these groups have undoubtedly said many times. Recent studies, however, have shown that alcohol—even when taken in excess over periods of many years—causes none of the disastrous effects for which it has been blamed. In fact, it has definite value in the case of certain individuals in relieving psychic and physical tensions, promoting general health and longevity, and increasing virility.

In other words alcohol, if used properly, causes more good than harm.

Now, this is by no means an invitation to go out and get drunk, to become a chronic alcoholic and a useless, will-less burden upon society. There is a point at which the definite benefits of moderate consumption of alcohol are overweighed by the manifold and obvious detriments of excess.

This, however, is true of anything, including exercise, work, or eating. Excess of anything is bad, and alcohol is no exception.

Now for some truths about alcohol—truths that may surprise you.

Doctors have discovered chronic alcoholics are often "twenty years younger physically" than teetotallers.

Be prepared for some spectacular surprises
in this daring article, written by a famous medical correspondent

There have been many recent experiments in which alcohol was fed to rats and other laboratory animals, and the results were carefully noted. In sensational experiments, many successive generations of animals had been kept in a state of intoxication throughout their entire life-spans. They had also been fed a diet which contained vitamins, minerals, and other substances essential to health.

These animals, on the average, lived longer than animals which were fed an identical diet but no alcohol. They tended to be healthier, and to be less afflicted with neuroses. Their virility was marked, and their descendants, with each generation, tended to be larger and more robust than the descendants of "non-alcoholic animals."

Contrary to widespread belief, the human sperm and egg cells are not harmed by alcohol. These cells can be placed in alcohol solutions strong enough to cause death when in the bloodstream (from .5 to .7 percent) without any sign of discomfort whatever. Thus, the theory that alcoholism causes sterility and impotence is completely exploded.

There is considerable evidence that the consumption of alcohol increases sexuality in persons otherwise subnormal in that respect. It is now well-established that many alcoholics suffer from a congenital malfunctioning of the pituitary gland, which in turn regulates activity of the entire endocrine-gland system, including the adrenals and sex glands. Alcohol seems to fulfill—to some extent at least—the triggering function not supplied by the defective pituitary.

This does not mean that alcoholics are sexual supermen. In most cases, they are not. But it does mean that alcohol provides a greater sexuality for some than would otherwise be the case.

When rats from which the pituitary had been removed were fed alcohol, no increase in adrenal or sex gland activity was noticed. But when rats with pituitaries were given alcohol, adrenalin was discharged into the bloodstream, the animals perked up, and marked interest in sex was noticed.

Girls should never underestimate a "drunk." He may look pretty helpless now, but with his hangover will come tremendous energy.

While it was obviously impossible to remove the pituitaries of human alcoholics for experimental purposes, intricate tests revealed subnormal pituitary functioning which, however, was compensated by the alcohol to some extent. In other words, it appears that the craving for alcohol represents an effort of the body to step up the functioning of the adrenal and sex glands—and possibly the hypothalamus as well (which controls sleep and appetite) through the ingestion of alcohol.

According to Dr. James J. Smith, the endocrine disturbance antedated and brought on the craving for alcohol, and indicated strongly "that alcoholism might indeed be

THE TRUTH ABOUT CLAIMING RACES

By BOB McKNIGHT

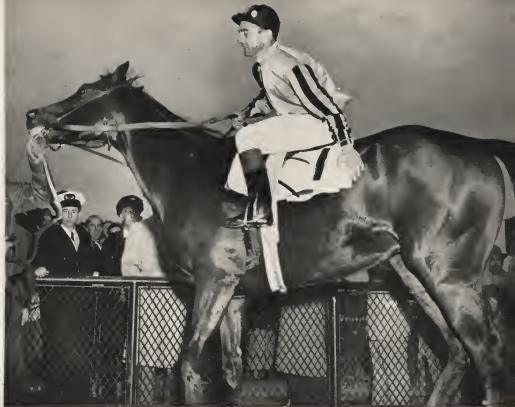

Here is an astounding way to win 70 percent of your bets. It's so simple you'd naturally overlook it!

TURNING to the past performances in the Daily Racing Form, and considering only the three horses in each Claiming race picked by the Consensus, we'll proceed to apply our own little Class gimmick.

It is simply this. Instead of considering only the last claiming price at which the horse contested, we're going to take a cross section of his last five claiming races. The reason we have to do this is because there is so much manipulation among trainers, for reasons best known to themselves, that it's impossible to gauge a horse's true claiming Class level by considering any one race.

By playing top jockey like Willie Shoemaker above, you'd win only 20 percent of your bets. Also avoid mounts like Tom Fool, left.

Here's how we do it. The past performances for each horse usually list some eight races most recently run by the horse under consideration. We find the claiming price at which he ran in each race, just to the right of the jockeys' names. All we do is add the most recent five claiming prices together of those three horses given us by the Consensus. The horse, whether picked first, second, or third, which gets the highest lumped claiming tag figure is the one we will play.

We'll run through the claiming races of an afternoon's card to make sure the simple process is understood. Since most of us will be going to the track on Saturday only, we'll take the most recent Saturday Form off our stack.

It's Saturday, October 17, 1953, and the first track listed is Hawthorne, which is located at Cicero, Illinois.

THE three horses picked in the Consensus for the first race are, L'Amour, Tour d'Argent, and Joe's Star, in that order. Turning to the past performances, we look at the Conditions for this race which appear just to the right of "1st Haw". This is a claiming race, so we're ready to go to work.

| L'Amour | Tour d'Argent | Joe's Star |

Above are the claiming prices (most recent 5) listed for each of our three contenders. In this case, the number 1 Consensus selection, L'Amour qualifies for play by virtue of having the highest lump sum of claiming prices.

She proved to be the winner, and paid $7.80, 4.20, and 3.20 across the board.

Here's how one man

By WILL LOZIER

HAVING graduated with honors from the Mars Technological Institute, I am, of course, thoroughly qualified to build robots. I can also install them, repair them when they get out of whack and, as I studied medicine before studying engineering, I can prescribe for them when they are ill. I do not wish to seem egotistical but on one occasion, at least, I performed a particularly delicate operation which I shall not describe here. If you are interested in the surgical procedure which was employed, you can find a detailed account in the Journal of the Martian Medical Association, Vol. 790, November, 2095.

My brother, William, was not technically inclined. He was the executive type and it surprised no one when he decided to enter upon a commercial career. I hesitate to describe William because, as he is my brother, you are likely to think I am prejudiced in his favor. So simply permit me to say that he is well over six feet in height, has a fair complexion and blue eyes, and up until the time he got married was a dominating sort of chap, totally uninfluenced by the opinion of others.

We had not seen him for several months; he had accepted an executive position with a manufacturing concern in a town called New York, which is one of the most important cities on Earth. He had fallen in love with an Earth woman by the name of Jenny, and they had been married about six weeks when the interplanetary telephone on my desk flashed its green signal.

"Answer it," I said to my secretary.

AMAZING NEW CURE FOR HEART DISEASE

Shown here is electro-cardiogram chart which reveals whether the patient has any heart ailment.

By LEROY THORPE

BECAUSE of a relatively simple and not particularly hazardous heart operation developed by two New York surgeons, thousands and perhaps millions who would otherwise be doomed to swift and painful death from coronary disease will soon be able to live normal life spans, in many cases completely free from symptoms.

This encouraging prospect was recently explored in the Journal of the American Medical Association (June 20, 1953) by Drs. Samuel A. Thompson and Aaron Plachta, who developed the new operation and have been cautiously observing its results for more than thirteen years.

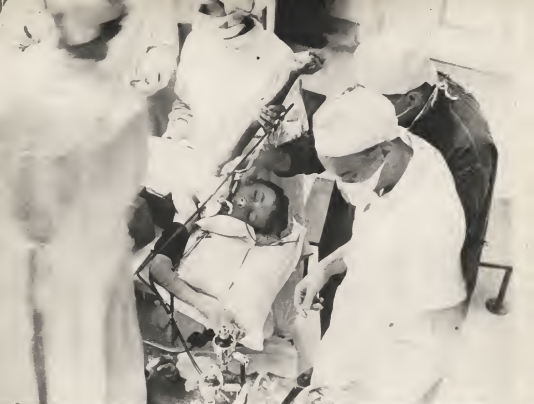

Incredible as it may seem, although all the patients operated on were "in a terminal state" or close to death at the time of the operation, having "everything to gain and nothing to lose," the average span of life after operation is already five years and is steadily increasing, since many of the patients are still very much alive and healthy. The earliest patient operated on who is still living has enjoyed thirteen and one-half additional years of life as the direct result of this operation. He may live many more years.

Patients who died at the time of the operation and postoperatively are not included in the above summary, obviously. The operative mortality rate was about one in eight, which is not high considering the fact that all the patients were practically living corpses, with hearts that were notoriously undependable, and consequently very poor surgical risks.

They had revealed symptoms of coronary disease for four and one-half years, on the average. Their average life-expectancy was only six more months. They were in such bad shape because only critical cases were accepted while the operation was undergoing trial. Yet only one in eight died!

Obviously, the mortality rate with coronary patients who are not in the terminal stage may be expected to be much lower. For the operation itself, as previously pointed out, is simple "and does not, of itself, carry any great risk."

Before we describe this amazing operation, which involves an entirely new approach to coronary disease, let us briefly review the gravity of the coronary disease problem in this nation today. For it is not improbable that you or I—if not already a sufferer—may be stricken with this dread ailment tomorrow.

Cardiovascular ills—meaning ailments of the heart and its associated blood and lymph vessels, membranous sacs and so on—have been increasing steadily during recent decades. Reasons given for this increase

OF GREENWICH VILLAGE

By KEN STALEY

Bistros on Eighth Street (above) are legitimate.

Village prostitutes are only for the tourists. The regulars are so "arty" these services aren't needed.

ON Manhattan Island's lower West Side there is a section of town, four to six square miles in size, which has quartered within its borders the strangest community of sin in America. This is Greenwich Village.

It's a strange little community full of social paradoxes. By day, its honorary chamber of commerce will tell you, it's a quaint section, ideal for family living, a haven for the country's artists, loaded with historical landmarks, and the site of three colleges and one progressive school.

But at night—that's another story.

When the sun goes down, Greenwich Village comes alive and reeks with its own sordidness. It becomes a community of vice and sin unlike anything in any part of the world since ancient Greece.

The main arteries of Greenwich Village nightlife are West 8th and MacDougal Streets and The Avenue of the Americas. From these three thoroughfares all vice and corruption flows, ebbs and returns. You have only to enter one of the several "men's" bars in this part of town to obtain a graphic picture of what I'm talking about.

From the front they look like any neighborhood bar in your hometown. The places are always packed, but as you worm your way to the bar you feel every male in the place is eyeing you.

Your first impression is that they regard you as an interloper. Then you notice the look in their eyes, and right away you realize what they want. Some of them have the appearance of the delicate nances that they are. Others are more deceptive, and possess the mannerisms of truck drivers, or even young executives. But no matter what their background, the look is the same.

Any woman who wanders into one of these "men's" bars, alone or escorted, is regarded with hostile suspicion. Sometimes the bartender will ask her to leave before she starts a row among her resentful competition.

Blatant homosexuality is a trade mark of the Village, always has been, probably always will be. Police and civic groups either ignore the situation or admit that they cannot cope with it.

Once in a while several homosexuals are picked up in the middle of one of their wild multiple orgies. The raids do no good. The "queers" can still be seen every night, operating openly throughout the Village, picking up young men and sinking along the avenues like so many tarts on the make.

PROBABLY the roughest Village spots are "the queer joints." Here, anything goes—on and off the stage. The rough-speaking waiters and bartenders, dressed as males and wearing masculine bobs, are lesbians. At first the whole set-up fools you.

An obviously effeminate master of ceremonies introduces the star of the stage show as "The incomparable Susie," or Maxine, or Yvonne. Susie comes (Continued on page 11)

Gun Lovely

By L. CONRAD PROFFITT

IT was past midnight. I had been flopped there on my bed, listening to the music of a late dance band which was oozing out of my portable.

I had heard the door open, without much noise, but I didn't really wonder about what had opened it at first. I guess I just didn't think about much of anything until she sort of whispered my name.

I cocked my head over to one side and looked at the door. There she stood! She had a goofy little smile on her lovely kisser as she said, "I suppose you knew that this was coming, Dutch."

"Sure, Cute Eyes," I told her. "I got an idea I was just hoping against hope. Maybe it's better this way anyhow!"

She agreed with me and I thought I saw just a short wave of sympathy somewhere in her it's-all-yours smile. Then it was only a smile . . . cold . . . just-to-be-doing-it. . .

Any other time, I sure would have given this wet-pilled redhead a real rushing off her feet. They had sent a tasty tidbit to take care of me. I wondered if it would do any good to try ribbing her out of using that gun, then I knew better. That didn't stop me from looking her over pretty good.

Those green peepers, under that brilliant mess of fire-tipped hair, made me think of a MAN WANTED sign hung in a Grosse Pointe shop window. The shop might be a classy powdered-ankle joint but the sign would still say the same thing.

Where her hair was pulled back under one of those real crazy hats, the juicy lobes of her ears were sticking out. They made a guy think of those soft-centered candies he got when he was a kid . . . bite into them . . . find them filled with warm good stuff.

The fit of her white summer nylon would have made a Port Street tailor talk to himself. From the waist up, it was like arithmetic . . . divided by two . . . in a big way. From there down, if it had been something she ate, she would have been too full to close her mouth.

I've heard a lot of chin music about this getting-shot routine. Some say it don't hurt a bit. Other creeps tell you there's a "little, bitty" sting. A man don't know what to believe.

I know, sometimes, a guy bleeds a lot. Or, at least, it looks like he does. What would my blood look like seeping through my blue and white pajamas? They had a bunch of blue drunk-looking birds all over them. Like, maybe, this Dali, or whatever his name is, had painted them when he was all jerked off at someone.

If some tea-head ever tries to tell you that a hoodlum ain't afraid to get shot, you can make book that he's ready for the nearest giggle-shop. In fact, a hood feels a damned sight more beat than anyone else when he has to just lay there and let some topsy-curry broad bore a hole in him.

Most times, he is a little quicker to fight back when someone hurts him. So, when he can't help himself, he's plenty mixed up.

As the redhead's footsteps whispered across the rug, bringing her closer to my bed, I got a fugitive notion that I saw a couple of pink diapered strips underneath her rustling nylon. Or it might have been just the way the lamp's light played sinful wild-oats tricks across her coke-bottle profile.

Somewhere far below, on Trumbull, a sharp beep-beep of some car's horn cackled like a hen caught in a sepulchre. I damned near laughed at the senseless tattoo it beat across my brain.

That horn sound dragged out other sounds that I'd laughed at . . . machine-gun chatter . . . thirty caliber. Where in hell was it? Guldiers? Ypres? Bruges? It made no difference.

Anyhow, when I'd busted out laughing, the guys had all looked at me like I had a rat behind my eyes that night, all at once, figure on biting someone.

That winter was a pure-dee bastard! I think something rotten and lousy crawled into the spots where

SECRETS OF EGYPTIAN SEX HABITS

When the Egyptians talked about "brotherly love," they weren't kidding. Incest was one of the more refined activities of the Sphinxy pyramid boys of the Nile

The Sphinx has long been known as a guy who kept his mouth shut. If what historians say is true, he knows just what he's doing.

Thothmes I married his sister, their children wed each other as well.

By BURTON B. REYNOLDS, PH.D.

NO nation in world history rose to the eminence of ancient Egypt, held it for so long, and finally fell with such complete disintegration.

The reason, say Egyptologists, lay in the Egyptians' sex customs, which were a curious mixture of the most civilized practices of modern times and a debased paganism that almost passes belief.

The race that was building pyramids at a time when the rest of the world was dwelling in skin tents and the most primitive huts of wood and mud believed itself descended from the gods. The ruler or pharaoh was himself the literal son of the Sun-God Ra. His brothers and sisters were also first-generation descendants of the god.

Out of these beliefs grew incestuous practices which surpass in sheer depravity anything of the sort recorded before or since. One of the major reasons for Egypt's decline and fall was inbreeding in the royal "god-family" and all down the line as well.

This persistent inbreeding, as is well-established today, progressively deteriorates a family until it ultimately becomes both physically and mentally decadent—puny in size, less resistant to infection, prone to produce more and more stillbirths and monsters, infested with haemophilia and insanity, and generally feeble-minded if not totally moronic. The sole exceptions will be atavists or "throwbacks."

The incidence of criminality will increase. Finally, if fresh blood is not introduced into the family, sterility will ensue—Nature's method of destroying a line that persists in transgressing one of Her basic laws.

Commenting upon the effect of inbreeding in the destruction of Egypt, the great Greek philosopher Aristotle wrote 2300 years ago: "There is a run in families caused by inbreeding which results in that, after a few generations, transcendent genius develops into madness, while solid parts become stupidity . . ."

It was a decadent sexual opportunism that held Egypt together long after she was a dissolute, minor power. The classic example is Cleopatra, herself an undersized but voluptuous wanton, who married her younger brother (aged 10) when she was seventeen;

The Menace of PEEPING TOMS

By MICHAEL DAVIS

Many of the world's most fiendish sex criminals started their hideous career by "Peeping Tomism," now recognized as a dangerous sexual aberration

DOCTOR ALFRED KINSEY'S new book—"Sexual Behavior in the Human Female"—had hardly hit the bookstores before American psychologists discovered he was sitting on one of the most alarming social bombshells of modern times. It was a casual remark, so casual that neither he nor the 250,000 readers who flocked to buy the $8.00 volume realized the importance of what appeared to be just a secondary question, but which can hold the key to many of our more serious sexual problems.

As if it were a matter of little or no consequence, he quite off-handedly mentioned that there were far fewer peeping-toms among women than there were among men.

New York psychologist Dr. Nelson Danz, one of the first to point out the importance of Kinsey's remark, has said: "We know that the majority of sex crimes and perversions originate with, or are carried out by the male. Where it starts, what is the beginning stimulus is important if we are to check either. And I believe that Dr. Kinsey has the answer in this simple statement of fact. I believe that peeping-tomism is at the root of several, if not all the sex crimes and perversions we are fighting today. If it is not the root, it is certainly the starting point."

The obsessed peeping-tom—or so we call him—is a very strange breed of person. Probably no sexual deviate goes to such trouble to fulfill his perverse cravings. This is the most disturbing facet of his warped personality. He will endure driving rains, remain in uncomfortable positions for hours at a time, and will even endanger his very life for a momentary look at the object of his lust—the nude or undressing female.

IN New York City quite recently Times Square police arrested a would-be peeper twelve stories above solid ground. He was teetering on an eight-inch ledge, clinging precariously to a slick marble building facade.

In Arizona, another member of this perverse group fell out of a second floor window as he tried to get into a more advantageous position from which to peer at an unsuspecting neighbor's wife who lived across the street. He wound up in the hospital with a broken shoulder and a fractured kneecap. The odd fact about this case was that the peeper had been pulled in by police only two weeks prior to the accident when he was caught fleeing the scene of a previous spying session. On this occasion he never would have been caught if he had not fractured an ankle while climbing a back fence during the chase.

Stroble is proof that voyeurism is most horrible perversion of all.

In the olden days, the Peeping Tom was regarded as a joke by many, if not by his victims. Today he is regarded as dangerous sex criminal.

Perhaps the oddest case on record is that of the sixty-year-old gentleman from Chicago who was caught in a tree in the middle of winter. He was taken to the station house where a police doctor instructed the jail guards not to lodge the elderly fellow in a damp cell—seems he had a severe case of arthritis. After further checking with the man's family doctor, it was learned that he had suffered from the ailment for twenty years, and that he had probably contracted it during his nocturnal wandering. The old fellow was almost crippled, but he refused to give up his perverse pastime. For all the police know, he is at it yet, pained and tortured, but still watching.

Some of these cases seem a little on the laughable side. And to the

HEALTH FOODS Doorway to DEATH

By following the advice of the health faddists,
By ARTHUR EVERETT SCOTT you may be digging your grave with your teeth

FOR years health faddists have been deploring what they call the inadequate diets of us common folk. They have pointed out that we eat far too much meat, too few vegetables, raw foods and fresh fruits. They say we boil or bake all the vitamins and minerals out, and throw away as garbage waste the best parts of those health foods which we do have the sense enough to include in our diets. To back up their claims, these jokers have called on the scientists to prove to us how poorly we manage our daily menus.

But now, modern science has turned on them and has discovered that the health faddists may well be eating their way into early graves. And the ironic part is: It is modern science which has, at the same time, created the means by which a painful death may be included in our most health-giving foods.

250,000,000 pounds of DDT are sprayed on vegetables today, by 1958 farmers will be using 500,000,000 pounds.

Foods sprayed with DDT retain the poison. Washing will remove only small amounts; we consume the rest.

Many insects have developed a tolerance to DDT, so science is now developing other solutions, all of which are accumulatively poisonous.

On September 14, 1953, Dr. W. Coda Martin addressed the New York Chapter of the American Academy of Nutrition. He told his fellow physicians how he had examined the fat tissues of twenty-five of his patients chosen at random. In each case, none of the twenty-five had ever touched DDT in its free form. Yet Dr. Martin shocked the medical world with this report: His laboratory analysis showed that the fat tissue of twenty-three of the twenty-five cases examined contained alarming traces of DDT.

Dichloro Diphenyl Trichloroethane, or DDT to the layman, is one of the most dangerously deadly poisons to which humans are exposed. In one way it is like arsenic, in that it is accumulative. That is to say, any DDT that enters the human body—however small in quantity—is never consumed and thrown off as waste. It is taken and stored into the various parts and organs of the human anatomy. It remains there as long as the body lives. Any new addition of DDT is stored along with the already accumulated poison.

Like arsenic, that storing process continues until the body has acquired it in amounts sufficient to render it toxic (deadly) to the human organism. There are many cases on record of persons who have been slowly poisoned to death by the daily introduction of arsenic in minute quantities into their diets by clever murderers.

The same is true of DDT, or the chlorinated hydrocarbons contained in DDT. In this case, however, every one of us is voluntarily taking the deadly poison

HOW YOU CAN IDENTIFY A Frigid Woman

By JOHN CHARR

Posed by professional model.

Watch out for the fickle girl—the one who breaks off engagements. She may well be a frigid woman.

There are positive signs by which you can spot a frigid woman. By learning these signs, you can avoid tragedy in your matrimonial life

MODERN society is plagued by frigid women. Fifty percent of all wives are unresponsive, say authorities on marital problems, while three-fourths of all divorces are traceable to wifely coldness.

However, our ignorance on the subject of female frigidity is abysmal. Many a doting husband believes himself married to a satisfied woman when in fact his wife is completely indifferent to his advances. Many another realizes acutely that his wife would prefer that he not "touch her," and yet he hasn't the faintest idea of how to go about changing the situation.

What is the nature of female frigidity? How can a man—preferably in the earlier stages of courtship—tell whether a woman is frigid, or likely to become so? If he is already married to a frigid woman, what can be done toward alleviating the condition for the greater happiness of both?

Fortunately, total frigidity is rare. The desire for gratification is a perfectly normal female impulse. It becomes weakened or mis-directed only through ill-health, physical or mental.

Consider, for example, the case of Helen C. A tall, statuesque brunette, Helen appeared so indifferent to men that they actually pursued her enthusiastically, believing her indifference a pose. Finally she languidly consented to marry the most persistent of her suitors.

The unlucky husband quickly learned that her indifference was not feigned, but that it was basic in her nature. Insofar as responding in the marital relationship was concerned, she might as well have been a woman of marble.

A gland specialist was consulted. He discovered the cause of Helen's frigidity. She was suffering from a thyroid deficiency which slowed her metabolism and left her apathetic to everything in life. Relatively simple treatment soon brought about a normalcy she had never known before, and with it her frigidity vanished.

Glandular deficiencies and many other ills may promote frigidity. For that matter, severe constipation and even changes in the weather can make a woman temporarily indifferent to the marital act.

Remember, however, that the physiological symptoms of frigidity and other ills are often easily detectable even to the non-medical observer. If your girl appears unnaturally frigid, try to find out what the symptoms are and do your best to have her see to it that the condition is corrected.

MOST frigidity, however, is of psychological and not physical origin. Here the observant man can often detect the purely mental symptoms in the early stages of courtship.

Take the case of Norma F. To all superficial appearances, Norma was a highly desirable young woman. She was attractive, dainty in her person and attire, well-educated, a good dancer, and she enjoyed the company of young men.

After turning down quite a few boyfriends, Norma finally became engaged to Jack N. Soon Jack began to suspect that something was wrong. Norma kept comparing him with her father—always to Jack's slight but obvious disadvantage.

Jack wasn't quite as well-built as Norma's father, his eyes weren't quite so blue, his track and baseball records in college weren't quite so impressive, and there was little

In addition, they knew the exact date of D-Day in Europe many months in advance and they had access to every secret OSS code message sent out of or into the country!

The most amazing fact about Russian spies in Washington is that in some cases they were defended, perhaps unwittingly, by the highest officials in our Government.

As long ago as March 7, 1946, J. Anthony Panuch, Deputy Assistant Secretary of State in Charge of Security, exposed Alger Hiss as a possible Communist—but it was Panuch rather than Hiss who was fired by Dean Acheson. According to Panuch, Acheson fired him by saying "as you and I don't see eye to eye on various matters, I would like your resignation."

Secretary of State Marshall took Harry Glasser to Moscow with him four months after Glasser had been named by Senator (now Vice President) Nixon as a Red. When Glasser finally resigned, Dean Acheson wrote him a letter of recommendation!

Senatorial investigators insist that even President Truman wrote a glowing letter to another accused Communist, Harry Dexter White, when White resigned as Assistant Secretary of the Treasury to become United States Executive Director of the International Monetary Fund.

In his letter, President Truman said, "I am confident that . . . you will add distinction to your already distinguished career with the Treasury."

It is almost impossible to tell, even now, just how far the Reds had wormed their way into our Government, since Elizabeth Bentley, a former Communist, testified that to her knowledge there were four Soviet spy rings in Federal service and that only two of these had been exposed.

However, official Congressional investigators have discovered that, in addition to the above, Communists advised Cabinet members, wrote speeches for them, and represented them in conferences. They were in charge of committees with prepared basic and American world policy. They traveled to every continent as representatives of the United States. They attended virtually every international conference where statesmen met to shape the future.

In the days of the Depression, when the Government was desperately trying to bring the country back to an even economic keel, they were in the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, the WPA, the National Recovery Administration, and other highly important departments. During the war they joined such agencies as the Board of Economic Warfare, the Foreign Economic Administration, the OSS, and the State and Treasury Departments. Toward the end of the war they were operating in the foreign policy field. At the end of the war they were turning toward the international agencies.

Remember the stupid plan to destroy all the German industrial plants and turn Germany into a farm state? Elizabeth Bentley stated that this was a Communist plot engineered by Harry Dexter White. Russia wanted Germany destroyed so that she could not be a barrier between the Soviet Union and the free world. Miss Bentley also stated that Secretary Morgenthau had been used unknowingly by White to promote the plot.

The Communists in Government service used a neat little game to help each other get assigned to important positions where they would be better able to serve their masters in the Kremlin. They used each other as references on Civil Service applications, they promoted each other, they transferred each other to strategic jobs.

But ever so slowly, these rats are being weeded out and exposed as the traitors they are.

However, Americans have always been quick to forget. But for the good of our country, every loyal citizen should hope that this time the memories of our politicians will be long—sparked by pictures of GI's who were tortured and murdered by the Reds in Korea.

For there is no doubt that the Communists will try and try again. They want to beat us without war—and so we must continue the war against them in Washington and over the rest of the country and chop off their slimy tentacles until the whole evil animal dies.

The Facts About PARALYSIS

found nothing physically wrong with him. After a long program of psychoanalysis, the reason for Carl's inadequacy was found. He believed that he was still infected with the polio virus, and could contaminate both his wife and any child which might result from the union.

"This is a common fear among paralytics—the fear of contaminating loved ones," Dr. Varstein explained, "and one that is wrong in both aspects. Seven days after the initial fever has subsided, a polio patient can no longer infect another person with the virus. At the same time, there is no evidence to the effect that polio can be inherited. Nor is it congenital, passed from one generation to another during conception or the pre-natal stage!"

When these important medical facts were explained to Carl, his fears and anxieties subsided. As a result, today he and his wife have four normal, healthy children.

So actually, there is no evidence on record wherein a paralytic has completely lost either his or her sexual capabilities as a direct result of polio.

In the case of the male, of course, his problem is somewhat physically simplified. If he retains his potency—and he usually does—then with a certain amount of adjustment, he can have a perfectly normal life. On the other hand, a female paralytic, although able to enjoy marital relations and reproduce, may have trouble during pregnancy if, let us say, the nerves of her pelvis or abdominal muscles are paralyzed. However, these cases are very rare, and are offset by the statistics which show that some women have actually benefited in childbirth from being paralyzed by polio.

Many normal women have complicated and painful births because they do not properly contract and relax certain abdominal muscles during labor and birth. But some female paralytics have been known to experience almost painless births, without anesthesia, because these very same muscles were paralyzed and, therefore, unable to interfere with a normal birth procedure.

MANY women have overcome physical obstacles which, at first sight, have seemed insurmountable. One case in Palmetta, Georgia, involved a Mrs. James Bentley who was confined to an iron lung. When she entered Grady Hospital in Atlanta, doctors told her that her chances for a normal birth were poor, that her only hope was in prayer. She gave birth to a perfectly normal child—a 7½ pound girl. Mrs. Bentley left the iron lung to have the child, returned to it immediately after the operation, and when last heard from was still partially dependent upon it.

The paralytics who have the most difficult handicaps to overcome are those like Mrs. Bentley who are confined to iron lungs. But modern science, which has saved their lives in the first place, has also been instrumental in helping them adjust to near-normal lives.

In recent years these people have been helped considerably by several discoveries which have enabled them to leave their iron lung for periods of time ranging from twenty minutes to seven hours a day. There is a "junior respirator" or mechanically operated bellows which allows the patient to remain out of the lung for as long as six and seven hours. A special rocking chair and bed equipped with a series of pressure points performs the same function as the junior respirator.

Lately, in Los Angeles County's Rancho Los Amigos, a hospital devoted to post-polio respiratory cases, the research doctors have perfected what they call "frog breathing." A patient is taught to fill his esophagus with air, then to force it into his lungs by means of a pumping action of cheeks and tongue. The forced air is held in the lungs for as long as necessary by closing the larynx. The process continues until the lungs are filled. Thirty-five out of 133 patients at Los Amigos have learned to frog breathe, are now able to stay out of their iron lungs for hours at a time—and without mechanical aids of any sort.

ONE of the most inspiring examples of what adjustments towards a normal sex life can be made by paralytics is that of Frederick Snite, Jr., otherwise known as "The Boiler Kid" or "The Iron Lung Kid."

As of the year 1954, Snite has been imprisoned in an iron lung, the first of its kind, for eighteen years. For the first four years he remained entirely dependent upon the lung. Since 1940, however, Snite has been able to quit the lung for varying lengths of time. The last count was six to seven hours with an assist from a junior respirator. And Snite and his wife have three children ranging in ages from eight to thirteen years.

Even though a paralytic is confined to an iron lung during the major part of his waking day, it does not mean that he must remain in a hospital. Most polio specialists and psychologists who have worked with polio victims agree that under proper conditions, returning the paralytic to his home is more often beneficial to the patient than not. If the paralytic's home environment is favorable, and if medical and physical therapy facilities are nearby, most polio specialists try to discharge their patients to home care as soon as possible.

"More than anything," Dr. Varsteins has said, "a paralytic needs a continuous maintaining of good morale. I know of no better way than his being sent home where he can, with certain psychological and physical adjustments, enjoy a normal sex life. As soon as it is medically wise, my patients are discharged into the care of their families. Those who can be cured get well faster. Those who cannot completely hope for recovery are the better for it mentally and physically."

Cases of people who have made the adjustment are surprisingly numerous. Their stories provide inspiration and hope to the many who have been stricken in the past, and to those yet to fall prey to this horrible disease.

Some of the most unique examples of paralytics adjusting to their problems have occurred on the distaff side. Completely paralyzed, Mrs. H. Weber of Johnson City, New York, left her iron lung just long enough to give birth to a bouncing seven-pounder, was back in the lung in a matter of minutes.

In Chicago, Illinois, Mrs. Mabel Wagner—an infantile paralysis victim since she was three—gave birth to twin boys when she was twenty-one. And Mrs. Elizabeth Warneke, 30, probably holds the world's record with triplets. At the time of their birth, Mrs. Warneke was still undergoing treatment for post-polio effects.

Probably the best example of mutual courage is that displayed by Ruth and Owen Vandervart. They were both stricken with polio within a day of each other. Owen recovered sufficiently to get around in a wheel chair, but Ruth was still confined to a respirator. The Vandervarts have three children.

Dr. Varsteins repeatedly said in his book: "Paralytics are the most determined people I have ever met. I do not think there is any group of invalids who have succeeded in conquering their problems as they have."

"It is a known fact that polio does not negatively affect the intelligence of a person afflicted. I am almost inclined to say that it actually sharpens it. I have never met any people as a group who try so hard, and succeed so often in understanding their sexual problems and who, in turn, are able to overcome them."

Dr. Varsteins also added: "And that includes many physically normal people I have known."

"Say when!"

THE STRANGE LOVE LIFE OF BOXERS

The next woman in Jack's life was one Hattie McLay, a New York Irish girl.

"The heartaches which Mary Austin and Clara Kerr had caused me, led me to forswear colored women and to determine that my lot henceforth would be cast only with white women," wrote Johnson in later years.

This decision wasn't precisely the quintessence of wisdom as later developments were to prove. In fact, it opened the floodgates of abuse on Johnson for the next ten years.

Hattie, said Jack, "was a splendid pal." An astute business woman, she accompanied Johnson to Europe, the trip having been financed by Hattie's father. She was with Jack when he wrestled the heavyweight title from Tommy Burns at Sydney, Australia.

Their companionship was ended in Chicago because of her constant beer drinking, according to Jack.

ANOTHER gal attracted Johnson's attention. She was Belle Schreiber, of Milwaukee. She accompanied him to San Francisco when he signed to fight Stanley Ketchel.

Johnson kayoed Ketchel at Colma, Calif., and Belle and Jack returned to New York. Shortly afterwards, they came to the parting of the ways. Another romance had come to an end.

While playing the theatres in 1909, Johnson met Etta Duryea, a Brooklyn girl of French-American extraction. They were married in Pittsburgh. She also accompanied Jack on a trip to Europe.

After Johnson knocked out Jim Jeffries in '10, he opened a cabaret in Chicago. Things looked rosy and Jack was convinced that he had at last found a love that would last. Then Etta committed suicide. Johnson closed the cabaret. For once, he lost all interest in boxing. The tragic event had numbed him.

A few months later, Lucille Cameron, a Minnesota girl, offered to straighten out Johnson's books in the capacity of business secretary.

"Our association was devoid of undue intimacy," said Jack.

However, ugly rumors were circulated. A newspaper reporter came to Johnson's home and demanded to see Miss Cameron.

"I told him she did not make her home with me and directed him to Jack Curley, the boxing and wrestling impresario, where she was living," explained Johnson.

Instead of seeing Curley, the reporter wired Lucille's mother in Minnesota, declaring that the girl was living with Jack. The mother arrived in Chicago and denounced Johnson. He was arrested on a charge of abduction but was released on lack of evidence.

THE search for a "white hope" to dethrone Johnson not having been successful, unfair persons took advantage of Johnson's predicament to launch a campaign of abuse against the Galveston Giant. Piqued because Johnson was champion, these characters made strong efforts to brand him as an undesirable person in order to relegate him to obscurity.

In the meantime, Lucille had escaped from the surveillance of her mother and begged Jack to marry her, declaring that she had been ruined in the sight of the world.

Jack married Lucille. Shortly afterwards, he was arrested on a charge that he had violated the Mann Act. Belle Schreiber was found and set up as the accusing witness.

Johnson was sentenced to a year and a day in the penitentiary and fined $1,000. Jack regarded the whole business as a frameup, and, like Turpin in later years, was also visibly depressed by the turn of events that had involved him in the toils of the law. He appealed the case, but took flight, and was beyond the reach of federal officials when the decision was upheld.

Johnson made his escape to Toronto, Canada, where he met his wife, Lucille, who had arrived in the Dominion by another train. This was the first step into an exile that extended until he surrendered to the federal authorities in 1920 and served eight months at Leavenworth prison.

In 1915, when Johnson met Jess Willard at Havana for the heavyweight title, he was jeered and taunted from all sides of the ring. Jack was knocked out in what he called "a heart-breaking experience."

While serving his prison term,

Johnson was heartened by visits from Lucille, but, several months after he was released, she divorced him.

In August, 1925, Jack was married to Mrs. Irene Pineau, an attractive divorcee. That union proved the happiest of all of his matrimonial ventures. It lasted until he was killed in an automobile accident while traveling from Raleigh, N.C., to New York City to attend the Louis-Conn heavyweight title bout in 1946.

NORMAN SELBY of Indiana, better known to millions of boxing fans as Kid McCoy, was a ladies man in the grand manner at the turn of the century and shortly afterwards.

After winning the welterweight title from Tommy Ryan, McCoy outgrew that division and campaigned as a middleweight, often taking on light heavyweights and heavyweights. He knocked out Peter Maher, the Irish heavyweight champion, and outpointed Gus Ruhlin, the Akron Giant, but found Tom Sharkey a bit too heavy and too hard a hitter.

One of the more unusual feats of McCoy's career occurred in London, December 2, 1901, when he knocked out Dave Barry, Jack Scales and Jack Madden in the same ring. He felled the three adversaries in a total of only seven rounds!

After he hung up his gloves, the Kid enjoyed considerable success in the silent motion pictures of Hollywood.

He became, however, more celebrated for his marriages and amorous interludes than as a boxer and actor.

Here is a run-down on McCoy's marital partners:

First wife, Maude Detty; second wife, Charlotte Smith; third wife, Mrs. Julia Woodruff Crosselman, who the Kid married three times; fourth wife, Indianapolis Arnold; fifth wife, Mrs. Estelle Ellis; sixth wife, Mrs. Edna Valentine Hein; seventh wife, Dagmar Dahlgren; eighth wife, Miss Sue Cowley, who was widowed when he committed suicide in April, 1940, in Detroit, Mich.

Incidentally, McCoy was convicted and sentenced in 1912 for the murder of Mrs. Therese Mora, divorced wife of a California art dealer. Baid and drawn looking, the one-time Casanova was paroled in 1932.

STILL freshly remembered are the items in the gossip columns which puffed up stories of a romance between Marcel Cerdan, the French middleweight champ, and Edith Piaf, the Parisian night club singer. Mrs. Cerdan, the mother of his three lovely children, was not amused and was not convinced that the linking of the name of Piaf with Marcel was just "publicecetee." Cerdan's death in a 'plane accident ended the gossip, although an apparently heart-broken Mile. Piaf burned a candle in church for the French puglist.

Stanley Ketchel, regarded as the greatest middleweight of them all, found that romance, like the paths of glory, led but to the grave. Ketchel, nursing an injured hand, was the guest of a farmer friend at Conway, Mo., in 1910. The housemaid was Goldie, a former girl friend.

Unfortunately for Ketchel, a farm hand named Walter Dipey was enamored of Goldie and resented Stanley's attentions to her. While eating breakfast in the kitchen of the farmhouse, Ketchel was shot through the back and killed by the insanely jealous Dipey.

Harry Greb was another puglist who mixed boxing with romance in his typically light-hearted manner.

John L. Sullivan caused many lifted eyebrows with Ann Livingston, a busty, 145-pound burlesque queen. Although she was married and he had a wife in Boston, the roistering couple went on many a champagne and bourbon spin that lasted for several years. She lived with him, followed him to England and, dressed as a boy, witnessed some of his bare-knuckle battles.

There have been many other pugs who were more successful in the ring than when they took on romance, too. Some fighters will tell you that it is difficult to find a girl who will stay patiently at home and away from the training camp for what often are protracted periods of time. Dissension follows and the marriage is put in jeopardy.

Other boxers seem attracted to the "glamor" types which they meet in night clubs or on theatrical tours. These gals often do not care to take up home work while hubby basks in the spotlight. In a few rare instances, however, such as Gene Tunney's marriage and Rocky Marciano's, have pugs become matrimonial champs.

The Truth About CLAIMING RACES

On claiming price lump (Class) above, Cullerton stands out like a sore thumb, yet was picked second in the Consensus. Cullerton is definitely our play.

He won, and paid $6.20, 4.00 and 3.20 across the board. Arizona K., the top selection, was unable to save any part of it.

IN the third race (we're still playing only claiming races, remember), the three Consensus selections are Miss Brook, Happy Age, and Betsy K., in that order. Their claiming prices in their most recent five races follow.

| Miss Brook | Happy Age | Betsy K. |
|------------|-----------|----------|
| $5500 | $5000 | $6000 |
| 5000 | 5500 | 5000 |
| 5000 | 4500 | 4500 |
| 5000 | 5000 | 3500 |
| 5000 | 3500 | 3500 |
| $26,000 | $23,500 | $22,500 |

By virtue of the largest lump sum, and therefore possessor of the most Class in this group of three horses, Miss Brook is our play.

This race was won by a seven-year-old gelding named Haberdashery. Miss Brook ran second and paid $2.80 for the place, and $2.60 for the show.

In the fourth race the Consensus gives us Dead Duck, Say-Belle, and Dalquari, and once again the number one selection qualifies with the highest lump figure, $33,000 as against $31,500 for the second selection.

Dead Duck won his race, and paid $4.80, 3.20, and 2.60 across the board.

The fifth, sixth, and seventh races are not claimers, so we can go home with three winners out of four tries.

So we picked up $10.80 net by the use of our simple little Class angle, if we played two bucks on each of those selections to win... Even if we stayed on and stabbed at the rest of them and lost them all, we'd be losing Mutuel money, not our own.

Anyhow, "Class will tell," if we remove some of the ifs, buts, and whereases.

THE PERFECT SECRETARY

I hated to be bothered at that particular inoment; there was a shortage of doctors on Mars, and I was in the midst of an experiment which was designed to give Robot No. 7,802-K the ability to diagnose the most obscure disease. From the corner of my eye I saw Paul, my secretary, coming toward me.

"I'm sorry to disturb you, Dr. Horowitz," he said, "but your brother William is calling from New York."

"Damnation!" I muttered and went to the phone. "Look, Bill," I said, almost before I had the receiver to my ear, "I'm a very busy man. Tell me what's on your mind as quickly as you can and let me get back to work."

"I want to get back to work, too," Bill said. "But I can't. Not unless I get your help."

Ordinarily, Bill doesn't go round asking help from anybody, so I guess my voice sounded a bit nervous when I asked him what was the trouble.

"It's my wife," Bill explained. "Is she sick?"

"No. I'm the one that's sick," Bill said. "At least, I can't work. Efficiency all shot, office morale low, sales dropping off to zero. I'm going to get fired unless something is done real quick."

"What," I demanded somewhat irritably, "has all this got to do with your wife?"

"I don't want to discuss it over the telephone," Bill said. "It's a strictly private affair, and for all I know, the whole universe is listening in."

I ASKED my wife to get out my flying suit and the following afternoon I arrived in New York. Bill took me straight to his office and locked the door. He ignited the end of a thin, oblong object, and blew a curiously evil smelling cloud of smoke in my direction.

"I'll have to talk fast," he said. "Jenny has got into the habit of dropping into the office at the most unexpected times." He lowered his voice and a haunted look of uncertainty crept over his face. "Jack," he whispered, "do you know anything about the emotion of jealousy?"

"Not much," I admitted.

I had run across one or two cases in private practice back in Mars-town, but had referred them to a psychiatrist.

"My wife," Bill said solemnly, "is the most beautiful woman I have ever seen. And I swear I have always been true to her. But, like so many females on Earth, poor Jenny is afflicted with the pathological condition which Earth people euphemistically refer to as a jealous disposition."

I said, "Humm" in my best bedside manner and waited for him to go on.

"When I took charge here, The Worldwide Perfume Corporation had a nice business. But the stockholders were not entirely satisfied and so they hired me to speed up production and show an increase in sales." He blew another cloud of that vile smoke out of his mouth. "Production is up, but sales have dropped to practically nothing."

He was beginning to get my interest.

"How," I asked, "do you account for it?"

"My wife's jealousy," he replied without hesitation. "You can't transact a wholesale perfumery without female help."

"Naturally," I agreed.

He leaned back in his swivel chair and stared dreamily up at the ceiling.

"I had a very efficient secretary," he murmured. "She was also very beautiful. But I had to let her go. But that isn't all," he said hastily as I started to interrupt. "I've had to discharge every stenographer in the organization and replace them with men. The payroll has gone up, sales have gone down, and Worldwide is going to pot."

"Bill," I said with just a hint of exasperation in my voice, "I'm sorry for you but I don't see how I can help."

"You're a doctor," Bill pointed out.

"True," I admitted, "but I have reformed, and since I graduated from Tech, I have done nothing but build robots."

"That," and Bill's face lit up with hope, "is exactly the point. You are acknowledged to be the foremost robot engineer in the entire universe."

SO the next morning I went to work making robots to take the place of the secretaries and stenographers that Bill had been forced to discharge. By the middle of the week the office was functioning again; eleven robots sat at eleven desks, taking dictation, typing letters, and chewing gum.

The twelfth robot was really a work of art. She sat in Bill's private office and in order to indulge his sense of the aesthetic, I had provided her with gentle curves in the precise places where they would do the most good.

Bill examined her carefully. Then he glanced at the photograph of Jenny which occupied a prominent place on his desk.

"I think," he murmured, "that this robot would look better if she had a few clothes on."

"Okay with me," I said, so Bill called up the Personal Shopping Bureau at Macy's and asked them to send over one of their representatives.

While we were waiting, I explained the mechanism of some of the more intricate gadgets.

"She certainly is beautiful," Bill exclaimed, pressing his thumb against a small button on the upper left side of the robot's chest.

"Leave that alone," I commanded sharply.

"But I want to see how it works," Bill protested.

"It has no function at all," I said. "It is strictly ornamental."

Presently the representative from Macy's arrived and took the measurements of the robot. When she got through she stood back and nodded her head in approval.

"This girl," she said, "is a perfect thirty-six."

"Never mind about that," Bill interrupted. "Get some clothes on her. You see," he explained after the personal shopper had left the office, "Jenny said she might drop in around noon and go to lunch with me."

He sat down in his swivel chair and started to shuffle through a big stack of correspondence.

"I've got some letters that ought to be answered right away," he murmured.

"Go ahead and answer them," I suggested.

THE robot reached over, picked up a pencil and notebook from the desk, and no matter how rapidly Bill dictated, she had no trouble in keeping up with him. Bill went over the first two letters and found them to be accurate in every detail. After that, he rattled off a long succession of letters, and had taken care of a really immense amount of correspondence by the time the representative from Macy's returned.

She had her arms full of bundles. Bill and I watched her unwrap them and go to work.

Unadorned, the secretary had been beautiful; but dressed in all the lovely things from Macy's, she was a stunning girl whom I would have been proud to walk down Main Street with when I got back home. The woman from Macy's was just fastening the top of the robot's stocking to an elastic supporter when the noonday whistle blew and a moment later the door of the office opened and in walked Jenny.

"Bill, darling," she cried, "the office looks so funny with all those robots sitting at the desks."

She had not yet noticed the private secretary. Bill and I hastened to get in front of it but we were too late.

"Who," Jenny demanded, pointing an accusing finger at the robot "is that awful creature?"

"Just a mechanical secretary, my dear," Bill murmured placatingly.

"Says you," replied Jenny. She walked over to the robot. "Get out of here before I scratch your eyes out."

The girl from Macy's slipped quietly out of the office. I was tempted to follow her example but, as the saying goes, us Horowitzes always stick together.

"Let's not get emotionally unstrung, Jenny," I said. "You evidently do not realize it, but you are making a big fuss about nothing."

"Nothing!" she screamed. "Either that girl's got to go or—"

"Stop it," I interrupted sternly. "That isn't a girl. It's a robot."

Jenny's mouth fell open a couple of inches. She walked up to the secretary and touched it; she leaned down and probed its nylon-clad ankle with a suspicious finger and then, straightening up, she pried open the secretary's lips and inspected their teeth.

"All right," she said, "it's a robot. But just the same, I don't like it."

Bill got up enough courage to put his arm around her shoulder and patted her comfortingly on the cheek.

"Please let me keep the robot, Jenny. It's the most efficient secretary I've ever had."

Jenny shook her determined little head in a way that seemed to settle the matter forever.

"No, Bill. I couldn't trust you with anything as good looking as that."

HE turned despondently away. He went to the window and stood staring down into the street. Suddenly he whirled and pointed a reproachful finger at me.

"It's all Jack's fault," he yelled. "I asked him to construct a mechanical secretary. I did not ask him to make one that's so beautiful she reminds me of you."

"Am I really as pretty as she is, Bill?"

"You're prettier," replied Bill instantly. "In fact, I've already decided to name her Jenny the Second."

"Well," Jenny sighed uncertainly, "perhaps—"

I didn't wait to hear the rest. The next ship for Marstown left in exactly forty minutes. I wanted to be on it. I was anxious to get home, put the finishing touches on the robot who was to be the universe's infallible diagnostician, and then see what I could do about constructing a female secretary of my own.

In comparison with the diagnostician, the construction of the secretary turned out to be quite simple. After it was finished, I held open house and everybody in Marstown came to see the secretary in operation and let their eyes linger on its graceful lines. I received congratulations from practically every one—and not one single word of criticism.

As a matter of record, the only person who failed to appreciate it completely was my wife.

our souls had been. The stinking thing never did leave some of us . . . me, for one. A lot of times, I figure that's what made a hoodlum out of me. It ain't much of an excuse but I got no other one.

SOMETIMES, I still get clobbered by the memories of those freezing cold nights. Nights when I'd cried, low and quiet, deep inside myself.

Other nights too, that were even worse, when I'd just sat dry-eyed, not caring a lot, not feeling much of anything, wondering if I would take long to grow old and die, hoping that it wouldn't. I remember promising myself that if I didn't get killed on that wild sashay I would grow old in a special kind of toe-stomping way.

Then, there had been blonde lovely Rlette. Killed at Sluis during a bombardment from the North Sea. She must have just festered up and molded away like every other decent thing at that time. Save those chapter house treasures . . . pictures drawn by guys called Memling and Van something or other! To blue hell with a scroungy thing called life!

At last, Redhead seemed to think she was close enough to me. The jeering fingers of a cool breeze were squeezing in through my open window between the slats of the venetian blind. They touched a few beads of salty sweat crawling down by spine and sent tiny chills back up in their places.

The muffled currents of air carried me a soapy woman-heated smell from Redhead and, on the way, mixed it with some clean-smelling cologne or something.

I saw Redhead raise the long-barreled gun and her soft pink hand was as steady as a tom cat's prowls. Damn the redhead's soft pink hand . . . her soft pink guts too. I could hear her breathe . . . slow . . . even . . .

I tried to figure if Redhead would ever turn all soft and womanly and wiggly. Would her damnably regular breathing ever be changed . . . so it would whoosh out in shameful panting gasps when she made her whimpering woman-noises? I decided that her professional angle would seldom, if ever, be any different.

I ogled her pink knuckles again. They turned a bit while when she got a good hold on the gun. That piece of steel would bite into my flesh in just a minute!

Would it hurt more when it bored into me or when it came out again? How long would it be before I passed out? Right away . . . or after a while? Would there be any of those jump half-nightmares . . . or just plain nothing?

I knew it was on the way when Redhead looked down at me and grinned. By God! No pain! Just a short jerk . . . high up . . . on my left side. Then I knew it was damned near all over.

I was positive of it when the full-hipped red-headed nurse rubbed my left shoulder a couple of times with her warm hand and said, "That shot didn't hurt a bit, now, did it, Dutch? It'll take effect in a few minutes. Better turn off your radio and go to sleep. Good night!"

She closed the door behind her, and the squishy sounds of the people in the outside night seemed to hug their clothes closer to them for protection against the chill of a coming dawn.

MAN AND WIFE

A property settlement worked out in Dallas court for a divorced couple gave the wife the family car and the husband the refrigerator and washing machine.

Doing his duty, Officer Matthew H. Dougherty, of Lapeer, Mich., ticketed his wife's car for over-parking. He couldn't resist putting this notation on the back of the ticket, "Who is boss now?"

Mrs. Betsy Clarke filed suit for divorce in London because her husband insisted on doing all the housework, right down to the cleaning, cooking and shopping.

In Detroit, a husband and wife, after parting in a heated argument, departed from home in separate cars, zoomed around the block—and rammed head-on into each other.

THE ABSENT MINDED

A Chicago taxpayer returned to the office of the Internal Revenue Bureau and told Director Ernest J. Sauber he wanted to make a correction on his return. The man, who had signed his tax return with an "X", then proceeded to change his signature to "XX". "I forgot I had two names," he said.

The much awaited debut of an express train from Paris to Basle, Switzerland, wound up with the train ending up in Strasbourg instead. Somebody had forgotten to throw the switch.

Wilbur Kellison showed up at police headquarters in Minneapolis and presented them with his problem: He'd left his new auto with 500 pounds of fish in the car's trunk two weeks ago in a parking lot and he couldn't remember which one.

A college student, waiting in Laramie, Wyo., court to pay a parking fine, automatically stood up with a group of three men sitting nearby and, at Judge Frank Collican's order, raised his right hand. A few minutes later he found he'd been sworn in as a new policeman.

As a precaution against burglars, Buzz Darlington, Lander, Wyo., druggist, hid $212 in a trash can, figuring that would be the last place any burglars would look. Darlington remembered the money the next day—just after he finished burning the trash.

Halled into court on a speeding charge, Prof. Jerry Gentile, of the University of Rhode Island, explained that he'd been "concentrating" and didn't realize he was doing 70 miles an hour when arrested.

The Lufkin, Tex., city commission announced it had decided to enforce a city ordinance requiring dogs to be licensed and the next day dog owners descended en masse on the City Hall to purchase tags. Then the commissioners discovered the city didn't have any on hand and hadn't for several years.

A Bangkok, Siam, fortune teller apparently neglected to take in with crystal clarity her crystal ball. While poring over the ball, her patron drew a knife and forced her to hand over a wrist watch and a gold bracelet.

SO YOU THINK YOU'VE GOT TROUBLES

Clad in pajamas, Rudolph Dieball, Toledo, Ohio, spent the night in jail. He stepped out of his front door for a moment, found himself locked out of his house and had no place else to go.

An Elmont, N. Y., lineman fell from a pole he was working on when attacked by squirrels from both sides along the cable.

A wedding had to be postponed in New Haven, Conn., because both the groom-to-be and his best man collapsed with ulcers.

For two nights in a row in Korea, when the film came to a tempestuous dance by Rita Hayworth, the projection lamp blew out.

A Los Angeles woman won a divorce after testifying that her husband called her a "hick from Minnesota" because she declined an after-dinner drink.

The day after Larry MacPhail, Bowie, Md., rejected a $175,000 offer for a colt, it broke its legs.

After issuing 9000 eviction certificates, Federal Rent Control Director Clarence C. Westerberg of New Haven, Conn., came across one with a very familiar name. It was one evicting him from his City Hall office.

It rained, then it sleeted and finally it showed at the Doncaster, England, race track. The winner of the race: Stormbound.

Eight Grapeland, Tex., men who went deer hunting confidently took a cook along. After hunting all day, the eight returned to the camp site empty-handed, but found the cook calmly preparing venison steaks. He'd bagged a buck while patiently waiting for the hunters.

Mrs. Marvin E. Howard was riding a horse near Woodland, Calif., when a plane landed a short distance from her. The pilot jumped out, asked her the direction to Sacramento, then climbed back into the plane and took off.

When a spectacular four-alarm fire broke out in Washington, D.C., residents two doors away were discovered viewing the conflagration on their TV set.

MAN AND WIFE

In Portland, Ore., John J. Fee fell from the top of a tree he was pruning and didn't receive a scratch but his wife was out for 10 minutes—he landed on top of her.

Upon obtaining a divorce after testifying that she had had to hide her husband's toupee to keep him from going out with another woman, she generously gave him back his toupee because she didn't wish to impede "his future romantic adventures."

In Montreal, Mrs. Larry Wilson was awarded the title "Perfect Wife" after it came to light that she was "always polite—even to her husband."

The West Suffolk, England, Federation of Woman's Institutes have been demanding a "husband proof" casserole, complaining that with the present narrow rims husbands can't help with the cooking without burning fingers and breaking something.

HOW HANGOVERS AFFECT VIRILITY

a metabolic disease."

Findings like these have led increasingly to the treatment of sexually subnormal patients by the administration of pituitary, adrenal, and sex hormones. These include ACTH, ACE, cortisone, the female sex hormone, estrogen, and the male sex hormone, testosterone.

THE one big trouble with alcohol as a rejuvenator lies in the tendency of the user to become a chronic addict. Actually even confirmed alcoholics are often in better health than non-drinkers, as studies of thousands of New York Bowery derelicts show.

Alcoholics seldom suffer from the debilitating and frequently fatal diseases, angina pectoris (heart failure), and arteriosclerosis (hardening of the arteries). In the former, alcohol relaxes constricted coronary arteries and permits them to expand, thus allowing an increased flow of blood to the heart and halting the agonizing constrictions that are typical of this disease. In the latter, alcohol prevents the formation of a fatty deposit known as cholesterol on the linings of the arteries, which in time causes them to harden and lose their resilience and blood-carrying capacity.

At Columbia University, Dr. T. P. Eberhard took four groups of animals and fed them for 160 days as follows:

Group one. Adequate diet, plus water.

Group two. Adequate diet, plus alcohol instead of water.

Group three. Cholesterol-rich diet plus water.

Group four. Cholesterol-rich diet plus alcohol.

At the end of the 160 days all the animals were destroyed and autopsies were performed. It was found that the normally fed animals receiving only water remained healthy and when alcohol was substituted for water no deterioration occurred. However, when cholesterol was added, the animals that drank only water developed hardening of the arteries while those that were given alcohol retained normal circulation.

This bears out the frequent findings that chronic alcoholics are often "twenty years younger physically" than non-drinkers. They are less tense both physically and mentally, and an outstanding psychiatric fact is that few alcoholics—either chronic, periodic, or merely "heavy drinkers"—go insane.

Alcohol is, "a very serviceable psychic anesthetic," according to famed Dr. Karl A. Menninger in his book, The Human Mind. Many authorities believe that, used judiciously, it is of value in easing fears of sexual inadequacy, psychic impotence, and even psychic sterility. However, as Menninger also warns, its very ability to ease "unconscious struggles" often leads to psychopathic addiction.

Another little-known fact about alcohol is that it does not injure the body in any way, even if absorbed in large quantities for years. It does not cause obesity, high blood-pressure, enlargement of the heart, kidney malfunctioning, polyneuritis, cirrhosis of the liver, and the manifold other ills attributed to it. The above-mentioned animal experiments plus countless autopsies on alcoholics prove this beyond doubt.

DELIRIUM tremens, blotched skin, and other ills of the confirmed alcoholic have now been traced to malnutrition and nothing else. The heavy drinker who is careful to eat and adequate, balanced diet is no more likely to suffer from these ills than the well-nourished non-drinker.

Alcohol is, of course, a food, chemically resembling sugar and starch. It is, however, an inadequate food since it lacks essential proteins, minerals, and vitamins. That is why the person who lives on drink develops malnutrition and its manifold ill-effects.

Alcohol cannot be stored in the body but is passed off in the urine and breath and burned in the liver. The latter process, which releases its energy, takes place at a fixed rate of about an ounce every three hours. You could drink alcohol at the rate of an ounce every three hours all your life and never get drunk nor experience a hangover. It is the excess in the bloodstream over the rate of metabolism that causes drunkenness and hangover.

Intoxication occurs when the concentration of alcohol in the bloodstream reaches from .1 percent to .2 percent, depending on the individual. Unconsciousness occurs when a concentration of about .4 percent is reached, and death at less than .7 percent. This is true whether it is your first experience with alcohol or your thousandth. The system does not build up a tolerance for alcohol as it does for morphine, for example.

ALCOHOL is also an anesthetic like chloroform and ether. It is carried by the bloodstream to the brain, where it inhibits the ability of the cells to utilize oxygen, and consequently brings out oxygen starvation or anoxemia. Unlike narcotics such as morphine, anesthetics have their most pronounced effect on the cortex or upper-outer layers of the brain which control thinking and are the seat of various inhibitions. This is why the drinker gets "silly," loses his worries and forgets his fears while drunk.

The narcotic addict behaves quite differently. In his case, the drug inhibits the respiratory controls of the brain first, bringing on a state of physical suspension while thinking processes remain unimpeded and may even appear to be intensified.

Hangover has nothing to do with malnutrition. It occurs in the well-nourished individual just as much as in the half-starved rum-dum. There is no effective treatment for hangover except fresh air and food, particularly carbohydrates. The former helps overcome the anoxemia (lack of oxygen) and the latter helps restore the depleted sugar content of the blood. A "pick-me-up" drink and a sedative may alleviate symptoms by numbing them, but they do not hasten recovery.

From these facts, it is apparent that alcohol has definite virtues as a general and also psycho-sexual rejuvenator. It is probably of little benefit to persons whose endocrine systems function properly, who are otherwise in good physical health, and who are of serene mind. It is, therefore, a medicine and to be used as such, and never to excess as a soul-destroying anesthetic.

are many, ranging from our frenetic pace of living through psychic tensions to unnatural dietary and health measures. The tremendous increase in smoking alone is cited by many authorities as a major cause.

Heart ills now kill more than sixty Americans an hour, more than 2000 a day, around 800,000 a year. They account for more than half our total death rate!

There are, of course, many types of heart trouble. Coronary ills are those associated with the corona or "crown" of arteries leading from the great aorta to the heart itself and supplying it with blood. About fifty percent of all heart ills are of coronary nature.

In the past decade alone, coronary deaths have more than doubled.

Symptoms of coronary trouble include the terrific pains of angina pectoris, a feeling of suffocation and being unable to breathe, inability to take even moderate exercise without severe distress, and—in severe cases—complete incapacity. The average life expectancy of a coronary victim has been no more than from four to five years from the time the first symptoms were noted.

Coronary operations often have the objective of increasing the supply of the blood to the heart by occluding or shutting off certain arteries with the result that the flow in others fed from the same larger artery is increased. About two-fifths of the patients undergoing coronary occlusion and who survive the operation recover their heart functions completely, according to Drs. Thompson and Pflichta. Many of the remainder, however, develop increasingly severe angina, and ultimately become "coronary cripples."

Whether or not they had undergone previous coronary surgery, all the patients treated by the new method were extreme coronary cripples, doomed on the average to die within a very short time.

Now let us examine the operation itself and what it is intended to accomplish.

For purposes of protection from blows and other injury, the heart is enclosed in a sac known as the pericardium, which completely surrounds the heart and in fact the roots of the blood vessels leading to it. The pericardium consists of two layers, the outer layer consisting of tough fibrous cells and the inner being a double sac filled with a serous (watery), friction-resistant fluid. Inside the double sac and closely adhering to it is the heart itself.

The heart has considerable freedom of motion inside the inner sac, which serves the purpose of an elastic cushion, much like an air cushion except that it contains fluid.

As previously noted, many coronary ills including angina are primarily due to the inability of the arteries to supply the heart with sufficient blood. Such a condition is known as ischimia, a local anemia or deficiency in the blood circulation. Ischimia may, of course, occur in any organ. It is not limited to the heart, and anemia may have causes other than those of a circulatory nature.

In the Thompson-Plachta operation, no attempt is made to operate upon the coronary arteries directly. Instead, a condition of irritation is deliberately set up which goads the area to create new blood vessels, in addition to stimulating those already present but functioning poorly.

THE operation itself is known by the formidable name of cardiopercardiectomy. The word cardio derives from the Greek word for heart and peri from the Greek for "surrounding" or "enclosing." It may seem odd that cardio is repeated twice in a single word, but the reason is obvious when it is realized that the operation affects both the cardiac region and the heart itself. There is more sense behind some of these formidable terms than the average layman realizes.

In this operation, some of the cartilage on the chest above the heart is removed. Then the pericardium is opened and made sterile, powdered magnesium silicate is widely spread about between the inner wall of the pericardium and the myocardium or outside wall of the heart itself (myo coming from the Greek for muscle; the heart being composed of muscle tissue). The severed tissues are then rejoined.

As is clear, this is not a difficult operation. The insertion of drains, for example, is not required. On a slightly diseased heart the mortality rate should be very low.

Now let's see what happens after the powdered magnesium silicate is spread between the heart and its enclosing sac.

Powdered magnesium silicate is, of course, talc, although it is far from being the talcum powder with which fair ladies remove the shine from their faces. This variety, rubbing between the opposing surfaces, sets up an irritation which has the following results:

There is temporary, acute inflammation of a large cardiac and adjoining area, including even the esophagus and lungs. Anastomoses or expansion of many blood vessels takes place, and the flow of blood throughout the area is greatly increased. New blood vessels begin to form between the pericardium and myocardium and on the surface of the heart itself.

As the acute inflammation subsides, the continuing presence of the talc results in the formation of granuloma or a roughened granular surface on the myocardium which is very long-lasting and insures continuation of stimulating blood-vessel growth. This slight granulation appears to have no adverse effects and does not result in the formation of scar tissue, which of course would completely inhibit the flow of blood where it was present.

There is some adhesion of the pericardium to the myocardium, but this is not sufficient to cause harmful constriction.

NOW note the benefits: The diseased heart itself attempts to produce new openings and joinings of blood vessels in order to increase its blood supply. The talc steps up this effort to the point that the rate of occlusion of closing of diseased blood vessels is compensated by the new blood vessels that are produced. Instead of the ischemic or blood-deficient condition which caused the painful heart symptoms, a hyperemic or blood-superabundance is produced.

This, in brief, is the principle of the new operation. Now let us study in more detail the results already achieved.

As already mentioned, Drs.

Thompson and Flachta have been performing cardiopericardiopexys for more than thirteen and one-half years. The patients included in the present report numbered fifty-seven (no patient operated on less than one year prior to preparation of the A.M.A. Journal report was included in the summaries).

Of the fifty-seven patients, thirty-seven noted angina as the initial symptom, thirteen noted coronary occlusion or the stoppage or closing of heart blood-vessels, seven hypertension of the coronary vessels, and three failure of the blood supply due to congestion.

Their average age at the time of operation was fifty-one. Men outnumbered women thirty-seven to thirteen (another striking indication of the impact of heart disease upon the male population as compared with the female). The youngest patient was thirty-five, the oldest sixty-four.

Seven of the patients died during or shortly after the operation. Of the remaining fifty, thirty-three were still alive at the time the report was prepared.

IT is highly significant that, of the seventeen patients in whom the operation was successful but who subsequently died, all had been afflicted with coronary trouble for a much longer period than had the thirty-three who are still living. For the former, the average period of affliction had been four and one-half years. For the latter, still-living group, the average was only two and three-quarters years. This obviously indicates that if the operation is performed early, the chances of complete recovery from the heart condition will be greatly enhanced.

Yet, among the seventeen who died following successful operations, the average extension of life achieved was five years! "We do not believe these patients would have survived this length of time without the operation," Drs. Thompson and Flachta note flatly.

The condition of almost all the patients improved greatly following the operation. Improvement was judged by measuring the decrease in anginal pains, increase in the ability to engage in exercise without distressing symptoms, increase in the ability to care of one's-self, and restoration of the ability to return to gainful employment.

Of the patients who survived the operation, only five, or ten percent, failed to show a fifty percent improvement in their condition. All the others reported improvement greater than fifty percent, while forty percent of the total group were more than seventy-five percent improved. In this latter group some showed no evidence of symptoms of any sort.

Bearing in mind that all these patients were gravely ill, beyond help by other means, totally incapacitated and doomed to early death, the overall results have been more than spectacular. The statement by the pioneering team that "... this operation has produced very satisfactory results, which we could not duplicate with other measures..." appears modest indeed.

It is too early to prophesy sweepingly regarding the future of cardiopericardioplexy as a cure for heart ills, but already there is speculation that it may be employed to advantage in diseases of the coronary arteries, rheumatic fever, and hypertension.

The importance of this is obvious from the fact that vascular or "vessel" ills are responsible for three out of every four heart-circulatory deaths.

THE FRIENDLY BRUNETTE

"Quite a rock, isn't it?" she said, smirking a little. "But I love it. Typical of him."

"I'd like to see it more closely," I said, holding my breath.

AS casually as if it were a rhinestone, she slipped the ring off for me. Her hand looked naked without it—there was a white circle around that tanned third finger, and to see it was almost like looking at the girl without her bathing suit.

"You must wear the ring all the time," I said. "And never gloves."

"I always lose gloves," she admitted. "I'm forgetful—that's why I've never learned to fly. But," she added, holding out her hand, "I'll never lose the ring."

"Better not," I said. "It's valuable."

And I gave it back to her. What else could I have done? Out in the middle of Nevada, there's just no place to hide. Roads are so few, and stretch so far, that a handful of cops can bottle up the whole state with half-a-dozen blockades. Short of killing the kid, which is out of my line, I couldn't do a thing.

Not then, anyhow. I still wanted the ring, so when we stopped for a bite in Tonopah, I took a gander at the car's registration. It was in the name of Ethel Holding, and her home was in Mill Valley.

I knew that place. It's in Marin County, across the Golden Gate Bridge from San Francisco. A couple of pointed questions, to make sure my driver was this same Ethel Holding, and the ring began to look like mine. Because in San Francisco, a fellow can disappear when he gets a diamond in his hand.

Before we parted, I had introduced myself as Wellington Kemp and told her I wanted to see her again. She was polite, but not encouraging.

There was no use heading for Frisco right away, anyhow. She was on vacation. Besides, I had to hang around Las Vegas long enough to make sure I wasn't wanted in Reno, because to lam across a State line brings in the F.B.I.

I didn't think I would be wanted, you understand—the gal who'd involuntarily furnished my bankroll wasn't likely to squawk. But some women will do anything for money—even tell the truth about themselves.

In the course of a couple of weeks I found out that nothing was on my tail but bad luck. I got so many bum breaks at the gambling tables, I actually had to roll a drunk for getaway money. I picked my man, though, and flew to Frisco in style.

From the phone book I could see that Ethel Holding lived at home with her parents. It's better when they live by themselves. Still, when I phoned, she was lonely enough, what with her boyfriend off in Korea, flying for the Navy. But she was the faithful kind—no dice on dating.

Kind of a challenge to my skill, you know? And that rock was a worthwhile prize. So I went to work and hired a guy to watch her place.

ONE afternoon when my stake-out told me she was home alone, I called up from Frisco and said, "Ethel, I need your help. I'm being falsely accused of participation in an unscrupulous business deal that was consummated at the very time you were driving me through Nevada."

"Oh," she said, "I didn't know you were a businessman."

"I'm not," I admitted quickly. "But apparently I look like one. Some lawyer stopped me on the street and said he recognized me. My only way to stay out of jail is to confront him with a witness to prove I'm not the man he wants. And you're my only possible witness. Could you meet me in the St. Francis Hotel half an hour from now, and go with me to this man's office?"

"I couldn't possibly make it in half an hour," she said. "It takes longer than that to drive."

I knew it did. I said, "I'll stall him. Please come as soon as you can. I'll be in the main lobby." Then I hung up before she could object.

Now of course I was shooting my wad, because there was always the chance she wouldn't come alone. Having made that crack about me not being a businessman, she might even catch on, and show up only to finger me.

To make sure the risk was worth taking, I had my stake-out call up when she left the house and verify that she was alone and wearing the ring. I told him to come around tomorrow and I'd pay him, and he sounded satisfied.

That made me feel better, because I figure suckers come in bunches. So I spruced up and trotted over to the Frante, waiting for the girl's Lady Bountiful complex to drop a small fortune into my hand, but ready, if my play didn't work, to walk off fast and leave her standing.

She showed up looking breathless and a little short of neat. "Am I in time?" she asked. "I rushed so fast I forgot to take my wallet, even."

Well, it was the ring that counted, so I could afford to avoid looking at her left hand. Instead, I smiled down into her big brown eyes and said, "You're in time, all right. I'm still out of jail. And now, thanks to you, I'll continue to be. I can't thank you enough. I wish there was something I could do for you in return."

"There is," she said, blushing prettily. "As I said, in my rush to get here, I left my money in another purse. So I need a little change for the bridge toll. The fact is, I need two tolls, because being without money on the way over here, I had to put up my ring as a pledge."

HEALTH FOODS— DOORWAY TO DEATH

into his or her system. We may not know it, but the health foods may be literally killing us.

THE health foods—vegetables and fruits—are the prime offenders because it is these foods which are sprayed with the deadly poison by farmers. Probably the most popular vegetable health food being consumed in American diets today is the common string bean. It is also the choicest morsel in the diet of a variety of garden pests. Hence the necessity of protecting the plant by whatever means available to the farmer. The most successful pest killer to date has been insecticides which include DDT in varying proportions—5% is the most widely used mixture, but some up to 10% and 12% have been tried.

There is no waste on a string bean. All but the ends are taken into the human digestive system.

The major edible portion is the skin—the very part of the plant that is exposed to periodical sprayings of DDT.

All the way down the line there is hardly a vegetable or fruit that is grown above ground which is not sprayed by DDT on several occasions during its development into a marketable product. Washing the health food will remove only a small amount of DDT. The rest we consume.

Dr. Martin has taken his discovery to Dr. Weyland J. Hayes, Chief Toxicologist of the U.S. Public Health Service, and Dr. Bernard Davidow of the U.S. Food and Drug Administration. These three eminent medicos have agreed on the following points:

1. Insecticide chemicals such as the chlorinated hydrocarbons contained in DDT are poisonous.
2. Foods sprayed with them, substance on their crops.

Because many insects and pests have acquired a tolerance to DDT, modern science has been looking around for adequate substitutes. Several have been found and are already being used by the nation's farmers. The most popular is organic phosphorous. But here again we have another cumulative poison that would only take over where DDT left off.

To date, the world of agricultural science has taken a strange attitude towards the facts presented by Dr. Martin. Although not actually denying the evidence, it has chosen to ignore it. In view of this indifference, Dr. Martin has pleaded: "It is essential that further studies be made of the chronic toxic effects on the human (by DDT) in order to protect the future health of the nation."

Even the U.S. Department of Agriculture acknowledges the importance of practicing some caution during the preparation of health foods. For instance, they are repeatedly warning the nation's housewives to wash all vegetables and fruits before eating. But as we said before, this alone will not remove the hazardous residue.

IT is ironic to note that some of the most important health fads—backed up by scientific fact—are also those which cause us to take DDT into our systems. An example is the changing attitude on the lowly cucumber skin. For years we have been discarding this part of the vegetable, consuming only the pulpy and seedy portions.

Now modern science has shown us that most of the cucumber's vitamins and minerals are contained in the skin. Thus the recent habit among some health-conscious individuals to eat all of the cucumber. But it is this very skin which has been sprayed with DDT that can, in the final analysis, contribute heavily towards the early death of many of us who succumb to this kind of diet propaganda.

Many insects which have become immune to DDT consume it and are later eaten by hungry lake fish. DDT sprayed at the shores of lakes for the purposes of mosquito control eventually finds its way into the bodies of neighboring fish. These fish—another favorite of the health faddists—are consumed by humans and still another supply of DDT creeps unknown into the body to destroy vital organs and the nervous system.

Dr. Martin closed his address to the Academy of Nutrition by saying: "My opinion is that even a little poison on our food is too much, especially when the poison is accumulative—when the body retains and stores it. Food free of these chemicals can be grown and is available but not in sufficient quantity for all. Why not?"

The answer is one of simple economics. For years mankind has grown health foods without any assistance from pest killers. But never before has he had to do so in such large quantities. So that huge crops can be harvested each year, a quick efficient way had to be found to control the garden variety of pests and insects. DDT and similar chemicals deadly to humans were the answer.

But in the meantime, these same assistants to the nation's farmers may well be condemning us to slow but sure death. As long as these poisons are being sprayed on the many health foods in our diets, there is every possibility in the world that we are digging our own graves with our teeth.

If Dr. Martin is correct—and we think he is—again we ask: "What will happen to the entire population in ten to fifteen years from now?"

THE SECRETS OF EGYPTIAN SEX HABITS

married another younger brother after the first's death; seduced the balding Roman conqueror Julius Caesar and became his mistress; poisoned her brother-king after Caesar's assassination; became the mistress of the Roman triumvir Marc Antony; attempted to seduce another conqueror, Octavianus, after Antony's downfall and suicide; and finally, following her failure in this attempt, committed suicide by her own hand in time-honored Egyptian royal custom by taking poison (not by allowing herself to be bitten by an asp, as is generally supposed).

This entire career, which was marked by far more liaisons and sheer non-political sex indulgence than can be mentioned here, was also studded with many acts of cold-blooded treachery. Cleopatra was by no means the romantic figure she is painted. Instead, she was completely depraved sexually in the tradition of her family—the demi-god Ptolemies—and she used sex unscrupulously as a means to gain her ends. Under our standards she should be considered a royal prostitute-doublecrosser.

The moral degeneracy during the later centuries of ancient Egypt is well-indicated by George Rawlinson in his History of Ancient Egypt when he notes that intrigue and conspiracy were widespread, "... the highest officials combining with the women ... to seek the life of the king, or reduce him to an imbecile condition, by magical arts, enchantments, and all sorts of villainy ..."

Slowly but surely, sexual license permeated the entire Egyptian social structure and destroyed the nation.

EGYPT is unquestionably the oldest of the world's civilizations. Her historical legends go back 10,000 years, and she was building pyramids 6,000 years ago. Her accomplishments were so great in those early days that many modern scholars have speculated that the Egyptians were originally survivors of the destruction of Atlantis, while the theory of a "lost wisdom of the ancient Egyptians" is also common.

Amazingly enough, she was at the height of her moral virtue and her achievements in all the arts and sciences at the very start—a complete reversal of usual history. Monogamy was the universal rule, incest was unknown. Some of the earliest writings testify to the respect in which husbands should hold their wives; the Instructions of Ptah-hotep (4,000 B. C.) says, for example:

"If thou wouldst be wise, provide for thine house, and love thy wife that is in thine arms. Fill her stomach, clothe her back; oil is the remedy for her limbs ... Give to her that for which she looketh and that toward which her eye looketh; so shall thou keep her in thy house ..."

There were also strict instructions against harlotry:

"Beware of the woman from outside, who is not known in her city ... (also) ... the woman who, when her husband is away, says to you daily, 'I am pretty,' when there is no one by ... It is a sin deserving death to listen to her ..."

Also, on the care of the aged mother:

"Double the bread which you give your mother ... Support her as she has supported you ..."

In other aspects, too, the very ancient Egyptians were a superior people. They were extraordinarily cleanly, the first race to introduce male circumcision, as noted in the Ebers Papyrus. Their feminine purification rites were not marked by isolation or other evidence of loathing. Before betaking to the bed-chamber, husbands and wives bathed thoroughly, anointed their bodies with scented oils, and rinsed their mouths. They bathed at least twice daily, wore frequent changes of clean linen, and fumigated their homes to eliminate unpleasant odors. Even in the decadent days of Herodotus they looked after their health "with emetics and purgatives, and cleansed themselves out for three days running, once a month ..."

Egypt produced the first great physician of record—Sar-sa, who was later deified. In surgery she introduced trepanning of the skull, amputations, appendectomies, and many other difficult operations. Her surgeons understood the function of the heart and circulation of the blood thousands of years before Harvey.

(At a later date, Egypt also introduced widespread abortions and use of contraceptives, administered by doctors who had now become a semi-priesthood who belonged to the "House of Life." Here is another evidence of moral and ethical degeneration.)

The Egyptians invented embalming, and had embalming methods superior to those of today. Early embalming was simple, but later it became complex, and was in the control of a priest-cult who belonged to the "House of the Dead." The decadent embalmers robbed corpses of their jewelry as a matter of course, while other priests who openly called themselves the "Society of Thieves" robbed the tombs.

Horrible to relate, the decadent embalmers often violated the bodies of deceased women, according to the Roman historian Herodotus. "As to ladies of quality," Herodotus writes, "when they are dead, they are not immediately sent to the embalmers, any more than such as are beautiful or highly distinguished; these are reserved for three or four days after death. They take this precaution lest the embalmers might pollute the bodies confided to their care ..."

Nevertheless, embalming was originally a highly desirable sanitary measure as practiced by the Egyptians. It was necessary because little wood was available for cremation, the Nile rose each year and washed out bodies buried in the lowlands, while bodies left in sepulchres on high ground swiftly putrefied in the great heat and presented a grave health problem. No less than half a billion bodies were embalmed in Egypt prior to the nation's fall.

The Egyptians were also first to practice irrigation, survey the land, keep accurate time, keep a calendar of 365 days, and study astronomy. It has even been speculated that they possessed precision power-machinery; some of the stones in the Great Pyramid of Gizeh weigh up to 1200 tons and are cut to an accuracy of 1-200th of an inch. Contrary to some "authorities," marks on these stones show they were hoisted by machinery, and engineers have speculated that only power-saws with diamond or ruby teeth could have cut them with such accuracy. This mystery alone has given rise to the belief that the Egyptians once possessed knowledge and skills they later lost.

ANCIENT Egypt was the earliest and in many ways the greatest of all civilizations. How was the sex oppression for her downfall?

The answer lay in her religion—and to an extent in its abuse. Originally the Egyptians were sun-worshippers, as previously noted. Predominantly an agricultural people, each man owned his own land. With increasing population, great cities sprang up, and the demand for all land became acute.

It was perhaps inevitable that the possession of land should come more and more into the hands of a few, and the actual workers of the soil become serfs. However, another factor now entered the picture; hereditary title to both land and slaves became important.

The practical Egyptians decided very early that title to land should descend through the mother and not the father. This—to put it cynically—was to ensure that at least one proven parent would be assured of transmitting property. And, with woman's new importance, female goddesses came into existence, such as Isis, the best-known.

The female goddesses were imbued with reproductive characteristics; for example Nekhebt—a vulture-mother-goddess—had "long feathers and hanging paps." Her symbols of power were her "crown, sceptre, stick, and pectoral (ornamental breast-plate)."

In the reign of Binotiris, the right of royalty descent through the queen was recognized.

With the principle of uterine descent firmly established, and many female goddesses coming into existence, it was felt that the male—still the nominal head of the household—should have greater dignity. The first step was the creation of the demi-god Amon-Ra, who in the guise of the wife's husband gave her child semi-divinity.

It was not long before all Egyptians of both sexes considered themselves semi-divine, with godly privileges. Gradually, however, the ownership of all property came into the hands of the reigning king or pharaoh, and he reserved divinity to himself and his family, including his brothers and sisters. The most brutal absolute monarchy of all time was born.

To keep the subject masses under control, the priesthood evolved a whole menagerie of gods and goddesses, mostly of semi-animal nature—humanlike birds, crocodiles, ibises, serpents, rams, cats, and many others. The hungry and unscrupulous priesthood subservient to the god-pharaoh, invented penances (tribute) to these various gods which procured forgiveness for practically any of Egypt's 42 major sins, including adultery and parricide.

Thus the stage was set for all manner of corruption. With her unparalleled freedom—whether princess or slave made no difference—woman took to sexual license to an extent never equalled in history. This included young girls scarcely at the age of puberty. At that time the Egyptian males were actually more moralistic (at least the married ones) and a three-stage standard for the selection of wives was established; according to A. Weidmann in Das alte Aegypten:

(1) A one-year "trial marriage," during which the woman was known as the man's "sister" (senti), but actually cohabited with her. This arrangement could be broken at any time, with or without cause, by either party.

...is the way our doctors put it—"Our chances of curing cancer are so much better when we have an opportunity to detect it before it talks."

That's why we urge you to check up for periodic health check-ups that always include a thorough examination of the skin, mouth, lungs and rectum and, in women, the breasts and generative tract. Very often doctors can detect cancer in these areas long before the patient has noticed any symptoms.

(2) A "probationary marriage" of no fixed duration, during which the wife (hemt) held full rights in ownership and management of her husband's property.

(3) A final nebt period which was supposed to be permanent, and could not be broken by divorce. However, these marriages were easily discontinued by husband-paricide, usually committed by hired poisoners.

Note the opportunities for license under these laws. Due to widespread trial marriage, virginity was not prized, so that there was no incentive for a woman or girl to remain chaste prior to permanent marriage. One of the most vicious customs was the practice of men and women consorting together for a single night or at best a few nights—neither with any serious thought of marriage—in the "brother-sister" relationship.

All classes participated in this license—the pharaohs and nobles in their palaces, the tradespeople and slaves in mud inns which were combined drinking places (the Egyptians drank both wine and beer), houses of "brother-sister" assignation, and outright brothels.

The height of luxurious license was achieved in the enormous Nile barges, floating palaces of depravity, which are historically renowned for the orgies held aboard them. Some of these barges were more than 300 feet long and were propelled by hundreds of oarsmen.

Even in the "House of the Dead" the embalmers had their "sisters"—women who defied the terrible charnel-house odor that could not be washed off but only wore away with the passage of time. There was no class unable to have its free or professional women.

Small wonder that venereal disease was rampant in Egypt, despite the excellent skill of the physicians. It is referred to widely by ancient writers; as, for example, in Deuteronomy as "the blotch of Egypt."

Finally polygamy was introduced among Egyptian royalty; the lower classes were much too poor to practice it. Just when it came in is not known definitely, but certainly long before the time of the oppression of the Israelites. Ramesses II, who was the "king who knew not Joseph" had at least three wives and twenty concubines. His number of wives may have been much greater, for he left fifty-nine royal sons and sixty royal daughters.

THE most debilitating curse of Egypt was inbreeding, which arose directly from the semi-divine nature of royalty and the importance of maintaining property, craft, and even menial labor rights in the same descent generation after generation. The pharaohs, who theoretically and practically owned everything, married their sisters and ruled and maintained title jointly while their offspring had a much more arguable title thereby.

We have given Cleopatra as an example of a sister marrying her younger brothers in succession to strengthen her title claim. Another famous example is Thothmes I, who married his sister Aahmes; she bore him two sons, both named Thothmes—the older of these sons became Thothmes II on his father's death. Aahmes also bore Thothmes I a daughter, Hatusu, who became queen upon the death of her older brother Thothmes II. For some reason she did not marry her younger brother, probably because her power was well-established. But when she finally died, he came into the throne as Thothmes III!

That is a good example of the inbreeding that went on among Egyptian royalty. It spread through the nobility or "king's brothers" who were known as the Imakhu for the simple reason that they were also semi-divine and also large landowners, priests, judges, and military commanders had to take precautions to retain their preferred position through "purity of descent."

Because everything was hereditary, incestuous marriage grew to include all the people. Tenant farmers, doctors, goldsmiths, metalcasters, astronomers, enamelers, stone-masons—all married their sisters in order to insure hereditary transmission of their rights and privileges. Often as in the case of the oracles and embalmers, they transmitted their secrets only by word-of-mouth from generation to generation, which had to be of inbred blood.

THUS, as inbreeding increased, Egypt grew progressively weaker and weaker, her people deteriorated, and she finally was overthrown as a world power. What have we to learn from her fate?

First, that she fell despite high excellence in all the arts and sciences. This is a warning that any nation, however mighty, can crumble from within.

Second, that assumption of supreme power by any individual is bad. We have a comparison today in the trend toward personal dictatorships.

Third, that superior medical ser-VICES and general health cannot overcome the cumulative effects of sexual transgression.

Fourth, that the concentration of all resources in hereditary family descent leads to a rigid caste system, which ultimately causes immense misery. (Though incest does not apply, this is the case in India today.)

Fifth, that trial marriage is liable to lead to all manner of excesses and abuses, including incest in both sexes and a general debasement of morals.

Sixth, that incestuous marriage ultimately destroys the family itself.

Seventh, that polygamy combined with incestuous marriage sets up a multitude of lesser heirs, leading to tremendous jealousies, confusions, and crimes such as parricide.

Eighth, that a debased priesthood (the pharaoh himself was the supreme priest as well as the demi-god) is both uninterested in and incapable of preventing the spread of incest.

Ninth, that any nation where extreme wealth and extreme poverty exist side by side is prone to sexual and other excess among all classes, and that such excess tends to increase.

Tenth, that any nation whose leaders refuse to benefit by the lessons of the past is doomed.

That is the lesson for us in the history of ancient Egypt. Let us try to avoid all the mistakes—sexual and otherwise—the god-kings made first and which their slave-people so willingly copied.

If we don't, our civilization will end in the same profligate downfall as did that of the land of the pharaohs.

THE END

HOW YOU CAN IDENTIFY A FRIGID WOMAN

likelihood that he would become a big-business tycoon—as Norma's father had.

"Whom does she think she's marrying, anyway?" Jack began to wonder uneasily. "Me, or a poor substitute for her father?"

Finally he asked her outright if she wasn't marrying him mainly because he resembled her father.

"Of course," she told him candidly. She considered it a compliment. "My father is the most wonderful man in the world," she added ecstatically.

As soon as he could, Jack found an excuse to break the engagement. Since then, Norma has been married to three different husbands, all more or less resembling her father. She was frigid with all of them, because her abnormal father-love would not permit her to be unfaithful to her father's memory by giving herself to any man.

Jack was lucky he discovered Norma's fixation in time. Many others aren't so lucky. They marry the girls. Such women, according to Dr. O. S. English of Temple University, "never seem to have a proper attitude toward their husbands. They not only cannot be tender and affectionate, having been taught (presumably by their mothers) that to be so is wrong, but they also cannot be loyal or have any respect for their husbands' opinions or desires. . . ."

Fortunately, the girl who still loves her father excessively often reveals her obsession by her exaggerated praise of him, and by the frequency with which she mentions him. Similarly, the girl who subconsciously loves her brother, a former boy-friend, or some other man generally reveals the fact in the same way.

Don't marry the woman who is in love with another, for she will almost invariably prove frigid!

CONSIDER, for example, Mary N. C. She was a vivacious, highly popular little blonde, but unfortunately fickle.

James C. was on the verge of proposing to Mary when a warning bell rang suddenly in his brain. He remembered that she had been engaged four times in two years. Was it possible that all four men were at fault? Would Mary break off an engagement to him, too?

James decided not to propose, and his was a fortunate choice. Over the next few years Mary had been engaged several more times. Her two marriages ended in divorce. Mary is simply a flirt, a

P. O. Box 225 Albuquerque, New Mexico

BEFORE determining whether your girl is frigid ask yourself these questions, and try to answer them honestly:

1 What is my sex drive? Is it low, high, or about average?

2 What attracts me to a certain-type woman, and in what way? Her resemblance (or lack of it) to my mother? Her figure? her coloring? The sound of her voice? Her odor? Her sense of humor? Her intellect? Her strength of will? Her integrity?

3 Which of the above are of most importance to me, and in what degree? Which are of little or no importance?

4 Is there a difference between the type of girl I like to date for "petting" purposes and the type I want to marry? What is this difference?

5 Do I like to flirt but resent it if my date flirts? Do I go with one particular girl because she resembles some loved one I have lost? If so, do I compare her unfavorably with the lost love?

6 Would I be content to marry for friendship alone? (Most authorities agree that friendship, while essential to complete happiness, is not a substitute for a satisfactory physical relationship.)

7 Do I tire of a girl quickly, switch from one to another, break engagements in order to be free to pursue new girls?

8 Am I afraid of marriage? Do I ever feel repelled by the thought of marital relations? When I make love, do I imagine I am with some other woman? Do I like to torment women, either physically or mentally?

9 Do my sex impulses conflict with my religious or social upbringing?

10 Do I consider sex healthy and clean, or unhealthy and unclear?

The above questions, if answered honestly, should give you a pretty good idea of your attitude toward sex and of the type of girl you prefer for a wife. They should also reveal if your sex thinking is normal or abnormal.

Now take each question in turn and reverse it. Imagine that your girl-friend is answering each question in turn, paraphrased, of course, to the female sex. Thus an early question you imagine her answering is: "What attracts me to a certain-type man? His resemblance (or lack of it) to my father?"

From your knowledge of her, what are her answers? Are they the answers you want from the girl you hope to marry?

Let's assume that they are. Let's assume further that you feel that you can make her a satisfactory husband. Then there's only one more question to be answered:

Is she in love with you?

There are many ways of determining this, as every man and woman knows. People who say they can't find out are generally afraid to seek the truth. Does your girl prefer your company to that of other men? Even though she tells you candidly that you are not as handsome as George, or as brilliant as Bill, does she make it clear to you that they can go jump in the lake so long as she has you?

Does she make it perfectly plain that all she wants is to live with you for the rest of her life?

If she passes this final test, then go ahead and marry her. If you have been honest with yourself and with her, the chances are overwhelming that you will not have a frigid wife and that you both will be supremely happy.

layman, they are. But to the psychologist, they are danger signals of what has become a national menace.

Psychologists like Dr. Danzur tell you that peeping-tomism, in itself, is not as terrible a perversion as one might imagine. Practically every male in the United States has indulged in it at one time or another (a fact pretty well corroborated by the Kinsey studies).

What is important, and what is causing grave concern among psychologists is the prevalence of obsessed peeping-tomism and where it can lead. The steps the human mind will take from this base of the ladder of perversion are as direct as they are unrelenting. The pattern of each case history seems almost identical.

"Peeping-tomism," Dr. Danzur says, "in the beginning is nothing more than an expression of juvenile curiosity about the other sex. At the same time, however, it too often becomes a fear of anything that resembles a normal sex life. Here is where the danger comes in. Instead of being merely a peeping-tom, the mature male with the infantile approach to sex often develops into a full-fledged pervert—like a voyeur or an exhibitionist—or even a sex maniac.

It should be remembered that peeping-tomism is not sexually gratifying to any male. Actually it is a sexual stimulant rather than a gratification. That stimulus must find an outlet. Because we are dealing with abnormal minds, then it stands to reason that the outlet will be abnormal.

Dr. Danzur has said that the next steps in the ladder were voyeurism and exhibitionism.

Voyeurism is one of the strangest of all sexual perversions. This sort of deviate is a sexually immature person, afraid of the normal, but so obsessed with sex that he must find gratification in the fulfillment of others.

It is surprisingly easy for a peeping-tom to become a voyeur—as he so often does—because his activities throw him into situations where he can view others conducting sexual acts.

A peeping-tom has such a warped personality—certainly after he has been at it for some time—that he believes all people suffer from the same perverse malady. This belief leads him into the road of the exhibitionist—another sexual deviation.

Exhibitionism begins when the male becomes purposely careless about the shades as he dresses and undresses in his home. Often he will wander nude about the house, pause before an open window when he believes—or hopes—that some person (preferably feminine) may be looking in his direction at any given moment. The next step, when he has become an actual menace to society, occurs when he approaches women and openly displays himself. By this time, of course, he may be classified as insane—or near insane—and can be put away, either forever or until he is cured.

The obvious end of the obsessed peeping-tom, and one of primary concern to psychologists and enlightened police officials, is that of the sex criminal. As we said before, peeping-tomism is not a gratification, but a stimulus; it is not normal, but abnormal. A person so abnormally stimulated seldom seeks his gratification in the usual manner of request and consent and is more inclined to resort to the methods of a maniac.

THE direction which peeping-tomism can take was dramatically illustrated just last September in a mid-Western state where the police were desperately trying to capture a sex fiend the tabloids had labelled "The Night Avenger." Detectives on the case had pretty well tied the attacker to at least four cases of criminal assault, and were fairly certain he had committed three others. In the course of their investigation, they reviewed the files on known sex offenders. They came across the file of a young man on probation whose history fit the pattern (name withheld because he has not yet been tried for his crimes).

The boy—nineteen years old—had been arrested several times for spying into the bedrooms of neighbors. Because no law covering this crime was on the books, he was turned loose. Then, about a year ago, he was picked up during a raid on a house of prostitution where a sexual exhibition was being held. He was released after paying a $25 fine. He was only a spectator at the exhibition and the laws covering this type of crime considered it only a misdemeanor.

In June of 1953, he was again brought into headquarters, this time on a charge of lewd exhibitionism and accosting two women. For this he drew a first-offender's light sentence of six months which was later suspended because of his age.

When arrested on suspicion of criminal assault the youth had just returned from one of his nightly forays. Under close questioning he broke down and admitted his several crimes. A psychiatrist for the state interviewed him on numerous occasions and frankly acknowledged that the boy's trouble seemed to have found its initial impetus while he was a victim of peeping-tomism.

"If we had laws in this city that covered what we call a misdemeanor," the psychiatrist readily admitted, "this boy would never have become the wretched creature he is today."

DR. DANZUR, and other psychologists of the same opinion, insist that most sex crimes and perversions could be nipped in the bud if the general public would face the reality of the peeping-tom problems. Until today, most people in all sections of the country treat the peeper as something of a prankster or social nuisance.

Dr. Danzur explains that this is an approach that is blind to the facts as we know them. "If the first-offender peeping-tom were treated as any other sexual deviate and placed in the hands of a competent psychiatrist at the outset of his perverse indulgences, many could be prevented from later becoming severe perverts or sex criminals. Those who appeared potential menaces to society could be institutionalized until such time as they were cured, or—if incurable—put away for good."

The peeping-tom is not a localized menace; he exists in every community in this country. He is a nationwide problem that has gone unchecked and misunderstood for many years. He comes from every strata of our society. No particular age group is without its members. No sexual perversion has ever been as widespread.

Hardly a day passes that does not see city and suburban newspapers reporting a case of peeping-tomism and featuring it as a humorous addition to the day's news. On the other hand, no day goes by that some sex crime does not find its way onto the front pages of practically every newspaper in the land. Until the recent discovery that the two items were akin, the peeper was considered a source of amusement. Today, the relationship between the two is no longer a laughing matter.

on stage, and your first impression is that here is a very beautiful woman.

The songs she sings, however, are hardly feminine. They begin on a suggestive note and deteriorate to the downright filthy. Her falsets and flowing gowns and made-up face cannot hide her exaggerated feminine affections. So exaggerated that you soon realize no woman you ever met acted quite so—so womanly. It's a professional "queen," an advanced homosexual who has lost all his identity with the male of the species.

girls—or chorus boys. It's safe to say, if "it" looks like a woman you're dead wrong. If "it" looks like a man—wrong again.

Later there's a rough-and-ready stripper. This gal is legitimate, a full-blooded female, but her performance is neither for your benefit nor for the other "straight" males in the place. It's for the lesbians who flock to these dens—"the butches," as they are called in this twilight life.

The stripper is usually followed by a mass demonstration of suggestive homosexual exhibitionism. As a whole, the show is the wildest to be seen in a city noted for its sin traps.

Where are the police all this time? After all, there are laws against this sort of thing. However, a series of payoffs keeps these joints alive. Once in a while a city-wide cleanup is started against these vice dens. Some of them are closed down. What happens? The cycle runs something like this:

A queer club opens. Its shows are geared for homosexuals but are tame at first. Then comes the payoff to the cop on the beat and the shows get more and more of base. Soon entertainers mix openly with customers, make after-show dates, some of them straight, whereas other relationships cross into the nettier world of homosexual promiscuity.

Then everyone but a regular customer is barred by the doorman—a sure sign that the public performance has degenerated into a private show for sexual deviates. Locker rooms are maintained on the premises where these double-gaited personalities can store clothes, usually evening ensembles. Upon arrival at the club the homosexuals don high heels and evening dresses, the lesbians wear tuxedos. Transvestism is a favorite pastime of the perverted souls and is called "going in drag."

This condition lasts sometimes for three or four months. A complaint is lodged by some irate citizen, the place is raided and closed down. Two weeks later it opens up across town, perhaps on the fringe of the Village. The same purple gangs flock to the new location until that, too, is raided.

Then it's back into the heart of the Village again, a never-ending chain of payoffs, hot shows, raids, closings, reopenings, payoffs, hot shows and so on.

THE bars and the "queer joints" are only half the story.

When homosexuals play rough they do it with a vengeance. Take their version of the badger game, for instance:

Servicemen and lone males out for kicks make the best subjects for this racket. A front man approaches the victim in a bar at about closing time, strikes up a conversation and then suggests a visit to his place where liquor laws won't interfere with serious drinking. Often the proposition is accompanied with a promise to call up a couple of girls for a good time.

Since the front man is always the "straightest" acting of the gang, the unwary male suspects nothing and accepts the invitation. After entering the front man's apartment the victim is met by a half dozen members of the gang. The obvious follows, with the male becoming the victim of a multiple homosexual assault.

To insure the victim's silence, pictures are taken during the orgy. He is later threatened with exposure of the snapshots to his family if he reports the crime to the police. Often the pictures are used for blackmail purposes, sometimes the victim into returning to the apartment at regular scheduled intervals for further homosexual acts with his attackers.

After long association with these amibidextrous creatures, the victim often becomes homosexual, himself. His inevitable end: playing the Judas goat to trap new victims for the badger game.

MOST reputable police officers in the Village agree that the section does not have prostitutes to any large degree. Although a few exist who will sell themselves to a male and are not above being the love partners of lesbians, they do not dominate the scene.

For one reason, among the free living—and-loving intellectuals of Greenwich Village there is so much promiscuity that a professional has a hard time making a living. Another is, prostitutes are afraid of the "queens." I have seen bar fights in which the features of an attractive chippy were scarred for life because a jealous pack of homosexuals resented her presence at one of their bars. She had made the mistake of approaching somebody's "boyfriend."

Of course, there are some decent places in the Village. But places like these are the exceptions rather than the rule.

The Village is noted for its clip joints. The queer joints are notorious for fleeing their "straight" customers while keeping the tab within reason for their steady clientele. But there are many nightclubs which do not cater to this left-handed group. Yet, they find their marks among the thrill seekers and loose spenders in the tourist trade or among servicemen.

Although it is against the law, performers consort openly with customers at these club houses. The stage show is every bit as hot as the ones in the queer joints, often hotter. It consists of a continuous line of strip tease artists, but this time the performers are the real thing. If the waiter sees you eyeing a pretty number in the chorus, he'll arrange to have her visit your table between shows. Her drinks of weak tea or colored water go on your bill as bonded whiskey, sometimes champagne.

As the evening wears on the shows get hotter and hotter. If you start getting bored—which is unlikely—your pretty guest suggests that maybe if you stuck around until the last show, you and she might go some place together—her place preferably.

Here's where she gets some real cooperation from the management. About 1:30, as a stage show ends, the M.C. comes out and tells you to stick around and drink, another show will go on in thirty minutes. You sit and wait, not knowing you've seen the last stage show, that your partner has skipped out the back door with the commissions she gets on the drinks you bought her. You're left holding the fat, padded check.

If you kick, the bouncer tells you you're drunk. If that doesn't work, they soft soap you—after you've paid the check, of course. You misunderstood the M.C., they tell you. Then they offer you a drink on the house. You may not know it, but the Mickey Finn originated in Greenwich Village, and these boys are pastmasters at mixing a potent brew.

Hours later you wake up in an alley. The cop on the beat has been paid off, so there's no use complaining to him. If he's a right guy who won't touch graft, you still don't have a case. The clip joint can always pick up a dozen witnesses who will swear in court that they saw you leave the joint under your own power—roaring drunk, but still upright.

About a quarter of a million people are jammed into the borders of Greenwich Village. No census that would hold water has ever been taken on how many homosexuals and clippers live there. A social worker once told this writer that he estimated they represented no more than one percent of the population.

But when the sun goes down, that one percent takes over the avenues and back alleys, lock, stock and beer keg, and turn the Village into the weirdest sin town in the world.

THE END

NUDIST CAMPS ARE RACKET

will cover her feet.

These mores which vary from culture to culture are devoutly adhered to. The one thing they share in common, however, is a fundamental disgust and rejection of nudity.

According to physicians at the Russell Sage Institute of Pathology, the human body is not susceptible to "hardening" by exposure to the elements, and in fact, one of the outstanding achievements of the human animal is his ability to clothe himself and thus survive in lands where otherwise he would perish.

sunshine on the naked skin can seriously harm the cells of the epidermal layer, dry up its natural oils, produce permanent coarseness and scarring, and cause skin cancer!

According to the Archives of Dermatology, 110 out of 1,300 cases of skin cancer observed were directly attributed to too much sunshine. Dr. Alexander Carr-Bolling Hays, F.R.C.P., notes in a paper read last month to colleagues in London, that over the last ten years, 600 of 983 cases of skin cancer occurring in Sydney, Australia, were caused by excessive exposure to sunlight. (It is well-known that Australians love to spend long hours on the beaches.)

Similar findings are recorded in

AT the University of Minnesota, researchers discovered that more than a moderate amount of official publications of the American Medical Association and the American Society for the Control of Cancer.

There is strong evidence that too much exposure to the sun also causes poliomyelitis (infantile paralysis), and Dr. Robert S. Hotchkiss in his book, Fertility in Men, reports, "Doctors C. A. Mills and F. S. Senior have correlated season with sterility in the summer months."

In regard to vitamin D—which prevents rickets—it is best obtained from orange juice and other citrus fruits. It is never acquired directly from the sun itself.

According to the prominent medical researcher, Dr. Julius Berman, "it is questionable that there are any benefits the human body can derive from the sun directly."

J. K., an office manager belonged to one of the more prominent nudist colonies on the West Coast. He developed a series of growths on his skin which his doctor diagnosed as cancer. He was advised that his condition was not serious and during treatment was told to remain out of the sun as much as possible, taking the precaution to be fully clothed when it was necessary to be outdoors. Eventually, his affliction subsided.

A thoughtful man, J. K. began wondering why, if it were true that nudity in the open air is healthful, he should have become ill as the result of this practise. He raised this question to his naturist friends, who instead of accepting his query as an honest expression of doubt, sneered at him and called him a prude.

J. K. soon realized that most naturists were fanatics, that their behavior was not at all unlike that of Communists! For like the Communists, nudists, when confronted with arguments they cannot answer, resort to smear techniques.

THIS is inevitably the behavior of insecure and neurotic people. Many operators of nudist camps are aware of this and viciously exploit such shortcomings in their customers. It is not by chance that many nudists are ardent amateur photographers. If you have visited a nudist camp, you will find that one of the chief preoccupations is the taking of "arty" pictures. Although the sport itself is harmless enough, it has served as an opening for blackmail—often encouraged and inspired by an unscrupulous camp operator!

Take the case of Miss E. L. of Chicago. She was invited by a girlfriend to partake of the sunshine at a nearby camp. Miss E. L. went, thoroughly believing in the high moral principles proclaimed by the nudists' literature.

Foolishly, she agreed to pose for pictures!

The unscrupulous photographer (nephew of the camp's owner) sought out the girl's fiancé, who was the son of a well-to-do banker. Shocked, the fiancé broke off the engagement and refused to pay a dime.

In this instance, the girl was engaged to a man of strong moral character who could not be shaken down.

I am pleased to say that Miss E. L.'s story had a happy ending.

Six months later, the broken-hearted girl found out the reason why she had been jilted. She sought out her fiancé and told him her story. He investigated, found the blackmail culprit, and finally called the police. The two were married, and the "naturist" was sent to prison.

A more tragic case concerned a West Coast society woman who came down with tuberculosis. Mrs. B. R. went to a rest home in Arizona, where her condition was eventually arrested. Some how she came under the influence of a friend who convinced her to join a nudist colony to build up her health.

At the nudist camp, Mrs. B. R. had her picture taken by the manager, and soon found herself enmeshed within the evil tentacles of blackmail. A proud and dignified woman, Mrs. B. R. did not want the photo made public. She paid out large sums of money, but the blackmailers would not relent.

Worry and anxiety caused the society woman to lose her health. Her tuberculosis recurred, and she is again dangerously ill in the Arizona sanitarium.

Because naturists are nothing but gullible and naive souls, driven by their deep-seated sexual disorders to believe in quackery and myth, they leave themselves open to glib, deceitful racketeers.

Because nudism is not outlawed, but instead, relegated to secluded places in our communities, corrupt persons enjoy a cover under which to operate their rackets.

Therefore, I can only conclude that laws should be passed to restrict the operations of nudist camps, to supervise or outlaw them if necessary in order to prevent a small but insidious blight from spreading to the normal segments of our communities.

NOW! SAVE 30% TO 70% OF YOUR PRESENT INSURANCE COST FOR THE SAME PROTECTION

GET BACK IMMEDIATE CASH

Hundreds, even thousands of dollars buried in wasteful policies

Stop wasting your money! Your family is not getting the insurance protection you think they're getting. The hard facts of insurance life are that you are paying too much for too little protection. The bitter truth is that you, like most Americans, pay burdensome insurance premiums out of a sense of obligation to your family, and yet buy only a fraction of the protection to which the costly premiums entitle you.

But your high-cost wasteful policies can—NOW—be turned into a literal gold mine for you.

Do you know the odds are 9 to 1 in your favor that

- YOU CAN SAVE 30% to 70% of your present insurance premiums and still maintain the same amount of protection.
- YOU CAN GET BACK HUNDREDS, THOUSANDS, OF DOLLARS IN IMMEDIATE CASH now buried in wasteful policies.
- YOU CAN INCREASE YOUR PROTECTION 2 to 3 TIMES with no increase in cost, without premium payments.
- YOU CAN ACCUMULATE MORE SAVINGS far in excess of any you now realize from your endowment or ordinary life policies.
- YOU CAN OBTAIN MONEY, when you need it, without borrowing on your policies, without paying interest, and without impairing the face value of your insurance by so much as a nickel.
- YOU CAN CONVERT INTO TAX-FREE income your present premium payments.

What's more, you can pivot a scientifically planned security program around low-cost insurance. You can have continuous protection against the economic consequences of death, disability, and old age . . . and a cash reserve that adds up faster than the most liberal endowment policy.

Sounds like an ambitious program? Only in what it achieves, not in what it costs. And you, too, can achieve it, if you do what thousands of others in all income brackets are doing—take your problem to E. ALBERT GILBERT ASSOCIATES.

First, let's make one thing perfectly clear. WE DON'T SELL INSURANCE OF ANY KIND TO ANYBODY! It's important that you know this. We are independent, impartial insurance specialists. We know the up-to-the-minute rates and policies of 600 companies—and pass on the money-saving information to you.

Our job is to obtain for your family full security at the lowest available cost. We charge a small fee which you pay only if we achieve the goal you seek. Failing that, there is no charge at all.

For 20 years Mr. E. Albert Gilbert has advised on insurance, tax, and estate matters in more than 10,000 actual cases. He is America's foremost insurance consultant. His intimate knowledge of how and where to secure "best buys" for policyholders has saved hundreds of thousands of dollars for his clients.

Why didn't your insurance agent secure these benefits of low-cost, high protection—your money's worth of insurance—when he sold you the policy? The answer is that he sold you insurance, you didn't buy it. That's the way most people acquire insurance—they rely entirely on the recommendation of the agent.

You're a practical person. You will understand the cold economics that compels the agent to sell—even to his personal friends—the kind of policies on which he makes the most commission, even if they don't fit your security needs. Further, as an agent of only one company, he recommends his company even when its rates are higher than competitive companies.

LET'S TAKE A CONCRETE EXAMPLE

Say you are 35. You want a security program that will pay your family a monthly income of $400 for 20 years. That requires buying in the neighborhood of $80,000 of insurance. You consult your insurance agent. What is his recommendation? An insurance plan that costs you from $2,000 to $3,500 annually.

HOW WISE WHAT COMPETENT IMPARTIAL PLANNING CAN DO

Can you afford to pay such high premiums? Even if you can, would you not prefer to achieve the same results for as little as $457 a year?

WHO IS E. A. GILBERT?

America's foremost insurance consultant, author of best-seller "Life Insurance: A Legalized Racket," "Life Insurance: Investing in Disaster," "Insurance and Your Security." Writer on insurance, tax, and estate matters for insurance magazines. Has acted as insurance advisor to many organizations such as Consumers' Union, Inc., American Investor's Union. Further details in "Who's Who in America."

TYPICAL CLIENT LETTERS

"I regard you as the best in the field."—businessman H.S., Columbia, Mo.

"Definitely that I can carry more insurance at lower cost and in addition pay off all policy loans."—Certified Public Accountant M.L.B., New York.

"My insurance premiums are now just over half what they were formerly."—doctor S.D.J., California.

"Excellent . . . reorganization of our group insurance program . . . marked reduction in cost."—Chairman M.P., professional organization, New York.

"You have the happy combination of a shrewd, practical counselor on individual insurance problems and a wholesome sense of social values."—author A.D., New York.

If you already own such a costly policy, IT IS NOT TOO LATE. E. A. Gilbert can show you how to successfully convert this high-cost into a low-cost policy—and in many cases get back for you hundreds, even thousands of dollars in ready cash.

Can this really be done? It has been done, it is being done—and it can be done for you too. Yet this is only a hint of the possibilities in planned security.

LET E. A. GILBERT ANSWER THESE QUESTIONS FOR YOU ECONOMICALLY, PRACTICALLY, SENSIBLY

CHOICE OF POLICIES

Which of the more than 600 companies operating in America offers the best contract for your special purposes?

PROTECTION AGAINST LAPSE

How can you periodically adjust your insurance so that as you grow older you can achieve increasingly greater savings?

LOANS AT NO INTEREST

How can you raise money when needed without borrowing on your policy and without paying interest on the use of your own money (as you do when borrowing on insurance)?

DISABILITY

What are the practical consequences in the fine print in your health and accident policies? Are there hidden jobs which will enable the company to avoid payment of claims?

ANNUITIES

In the annuity contract really the best plan for creating savings for retirement? Are there better and still more profitable savings plans than insurance policies or annuities?

GUARANTEED RESULTS OR MONEY BACK

We charge a nominal fee of $5 for a preliminary analysis of your present insurance program. If your program is sound and operating at the lowest possible cost, our analysis will confirm that fact. In such case, we will return your $5, because we charge a fee only when we achieve savings for you.

If your program is faulty, we will specify the improvements that can be made and the savings that can be effected.

You are under no obligation to put our recommendations into effect. Further, if you are not happy with any aspect of our analysis, you may ask for and will promptly receive a refund of your $5.

Should you decide to go ahead with our recommendations, our fee is only $3 per thousand dollars of insurance you now own.

You have security and immediate cash to gain at no risk to yourself. We fill out the maps and mail them. You will receive our Residential Analysis Fact Form by return mail, the answers to which form the basis for our detailed analysis and recommendations.

Check the Kind of Body YOU Want! RIGHT IN THE COUPON BELOW

...and I'll Prove How EASILY You Can Have It!

Charles Atlas

Assigned the title of "The World's Strongest Man" in 1920 by the National Endowment.

JUST tell me where you want it—and I'll add SOLID INCHES of powerful new muscle SO FAST your friends will grow bug-eyed with wonder!

Do you want me to broaden your shoulders—put trip-hammer power in both your arms—make two pillars of strength? Then just check what you want in the coupon below. I'll prove you can get it in just 15 minutes a day—in your own home—or it won't cost you a penny!

I don't care if you are 15 or 50 years old—or how ashamed of your present physical condition you may be. I can give you a "barrel chest" and a vice-like grip. I can shoot new strength into your old backbone, exercise those inner organs—help you cram your body so full of pep, vigor and red-blooded vitality that you won't feel there's even "standing room" left for weakness and that lazy feeling. I'll wake up that sleeping energy of yours and make it hum like a high-powered dynamo! You'll feel and look different. Man, you'll be LIVE!

WHAT'S MY SECRET?

"DYNAMIC TENSION!" That's the ticket! The identical natural method that I myself developed to change my body from the scrawny skinny chested weakling I was at 17 to my present superman physique! Thousands of other fellows are becoming marvelously physical specimens—may I give you no gadgets or contraptions to fool with. When you have learned to develop your strength through "Dynamic Tension" you can laugh at artificial muscle-makers. You simply utilize the DORMANT muscle-power in your own God-given body—watch it increase and multiply double-quick into real solid LIVE MUSCLE!

My method—"Dynamic Tension" will turn the trick for you. No theory—so easy! Spend only 15 minutes a day in your own home. From the very start you'll be using my method of "Dynamic Tension" almost unconsciously every minute of the day—walking, bending over, etc.—to BUILD THE MUSCLE and VITALITY you want. And you'll be using the method which many great athletes use for keeping in condition— prize fighters, wrestlers, baseball and football players, etc.

Here's The Kind of Results I Get:

"I gained 11 lbs. and 4 1/2 inches on my chest, 3 inches on my arms. I am never constipated!"
—Henry Neven, Canada

"I gained 34 lbs. and increased my chest 6 inches!"
—Stanley Lyon, Calif.

"What a difference! I have put 3 1/2 inches on my chest (natural) and 2 1/2 inches expanded!"
—E. S., New York

"Gained 20 pounds. When I started your course I weighed only 141. Now I weigh 170."

—T. K., New York

"The benefits are wonderful. The first week my arm increased one inch, my chest two inches."
—E. M., Conn.

"You changed me from a weakling to a real he-man. My chest has gone a solid 6 inches of muscle."
—J. W., Maryland
